Student Senator barred from seat

LENNOXVILLE (CUPI) - The administration of Bishops University in Lennoxville has barred a newly elected student senator from taking his seat on Senate.

In the latest of a series of actions against student representation, Administration President Dennis Healy and Registrar J.P. Dawson notified student council officials that Paul Trollope, elected to Senate Feb. 25 by an overwhelming majority of students was unacceptable as a student representative. There are five students on the 20 member Senate.

Trollope is a second year student and editor of the student newspaper. He has sat on a number of university bodies including the Faculty of Arts.

Student representatives

speculate that the move is a response to a Board of Governors subcommittee recommendation for increased student representation at all levels, and increase in the power of the Senate and abolition of the Board of Governors as it is presently constituted. The Board is currently composed of Prominent Montreal financiers, corporation executives and chartered accountants who view with distaste the subcommittee recommendations.

In addition, the student newspaper, The Campus, under Trollope's editorship, has severely criticized the workings of the campus administration.

Newly elected student council president, John Keay has made representation to the Principal and Board of Governors that Trollope be allowed to take his seat immediately. He considers the veto of a duly elected student representative by the administration as "undermining the spirit of student representation."

Healy and Dawson claim that Trollope is not considered to be in good academic standing although he has passed all semester examinations.

They also contend that students from the year in which Trollope is enrolled are ineligible for election to the Senate. Yet, according to the University's constitution "student senators shall be elected by and from the full time student body, in such a manner and with such academic divisional representation as the student body shall see fit."
