

Ottawa, August 27, 1908.

Dear Mr. Revell:

I was pleased to discover, on writing your agent in Toronto, Mr. Gundy, that the supply of my little book, "The Secret of Heroism," was exhausted. Mr. Gundy has written to say he has ordered an additional number from you. Will this mean, by any chance, the getting out of a third edition? I hope it may. Should such be the case, there is one slight correction I would like to make, in which I find a wrong word has been used.

I had the pleasure of three interviews with President Roosevelt this year, and on the occasion of the second interview, presented him with a copy of this book. On the third interview, he spoke to me at some length of it, speaking of Harper in the highest terms, and of the interest with which he had read the volume.

I also learned from Col. McCook of New York, that it was his intention to speak to Mr. Carnegie about the 500 or 600 copies which he promised to take from me. You may remember that he offered to take this number, but asked me to write him, saying what I would like to have done with them. For personal reasons I
