FOWLS AND THEIR FRUIT.

Dry earth is a good material to apply under the roosts. The nests should be cleaned regularly to keep them from vermin. The food for chicks should be placed on boards in order that their feeding places may be kept clean:

Pullets may be kept for laying when the eggs are sold, but for batching the hens should be kept. One advantage in raising turkeys is that they can secure a good part of their food from the fields.

Filth will breed lice, and more fowls and chicks die from lice than from all other diseases to which fowls are subject. Fowls seldom tire of milk. They may eat too much grain or meat for their health, but milk in any form is palatable and healthy. It is not necessary that fowls should have costly food. In fact highly concentrated food is a positive injury. should have a certain amount of coarse food to keep them healthy.

The flock of hens kept busy scratching does not contract the vices peculiar to those fowls that have nothing to do, and they keep in good flesh and health. The clean plumage and bright red comb indicate that egg foods are unnecessary

PHYSICAL PAIN.

How a Little of It In Vaccination

Affects Men. In one of the health board's free vac cination offices the other day a tall, strong looking man lay stretched on a table helpless, while the policeman who was on special post in the office stood over him with a bottle of ammonia. The ammonia was extraordinarily strong, but the policeman held it close to the man's nostrils without drawing from him any more forcible sign of discomfort than a slight sniffing and turning of the head.

"That's a pretty example," said one of the men who was waiting, bare armed, to have himself scratched, "of the comparative inability of a man to stand physical pain. I mean the inability as compared with a womau's endurance. Whether it is because woman is more used to enduring pain or whether she's so constructed, with a less sensitive physical organism, that she is better able to stand it it is a striking fact that a woman can endure without a murmur what would often not only draw a cry from a man, but would actually cause him to lose con-

"Now that man has only had his arm scratched with a needle, and yet he keeled over like a stuck sheep. I dare say that in a bruising fight with a pair of seven ounce gloves he would stand up with the best of them, but the more subtle sorts of pains, such as that scratching through the outer cuticle directly down to the small blood vessels and the surface of the nerves, is something that takes his strength all out of him." The man had, indeed, fainted away.

Many persons, particularly those of high strung organisms, are thus affected by pain in a way altogether incommensurate with the actual "hurt." A bump on the head, a squeezing of a finger in a door, causes a nervous reaction which makes them faint or even takes away consciousness for a "People of this sort," said the doc tor in the vaccination office, "are made faint oftentimes purely through their imagination. They can't control it. Involuntarily, even though they have the 'will' to go through an ordeal, their nervous system reacts against it, and they faint away. A patient, for instance, may faint the first time a bit of cotton soaked in an antiseptic wash is thrust up his nose. The operation doesn't really 'hurt' at all, but the feeling is a new, unpleasant and curious one. Without shrinking from it at all, the patient finds himself sud dealy growing faint. His high strung nervous system has involuntarily re-

Remarkable Apache Marksman, Every one who goes to the Arizona penitentiary is interested in the Gatling guns which are placed on the guard stands arranged at intervals along the top of the walls. The largest and principal gun is in charge of a young Mexican who boasts of his Apache blood. He is rated as the best marksman with a Gatling gun in the United States. General McCook of the United States army says that his manipulation of the complicated weapon and his accuracy of aim are simply marvelous. The young Mexican has an excellent field for target practice over the Gila mud flats just above the prison. A tin can six inches in diameter placed at a distance of 700 yards he will hit four times out of five with the Gatling gun. When it is remembered that he can fire 500 shots a minute, the possibility of a convict's escape is too small to calcu-

A recent test of the marksmanship of this young Apache gunner was made. From behind a stone wall 100 tin cans of the size of common fruit cans were thrown one at a time haphazard in the air, just as clay pigeons are automatically thrown at shooting matches. The Apache had his gun ready and had to aim as quick as a flash at each can at a distance of 250 yards. He pierced 37 out of the 100 before they fell behind the stone inclo

Left All to His Valet. An English nobleman recently bequeathed his entire estate, the taxable valuation of which was more than $50. 000 in the equivalent of American mon ey, to a valet who had served him long and well. Amid the innume able complaints of lack of constant and fidelity in domestic service this is a notable example of lasting attachment between master and man and one wall worth thinking over.
