FRUIT TREES.

To the Editor of The Planet: Sir,-Taking a great interest in the arious kinds of fruit and having each year chosen and planted man, running up in the thousands. I naturally visit these trees from time to time to see these trees from time to time to see how they are getting on.

I find that hundreds and hundreds have this year been winter killed, not only on the farms but im the numberies. A tree that is winter killed will frequently bud of and then the leaves due off and the tree is done for. done for,

Those that have suffered most have

Those that have suffered most have been Baldwin apples, which are practically not offered, and before ordering, people should be particular about their size, age, etc. Peaches, of some kinds, and cherries and plums have caused beavy losses to nurserymen, consequently they will be expensive. I was surprised to see so many Moore's Arctic plums killed. I was sorry for this, as it is such a good bearer. People wanting plums should make a note of this. I would rather replace with some of the Japan plums as I can find none of them winter killed.
