SCOOT FRIENDS SCOOT, TO THE YORK STREET RESTAURANT.

Christmas has come and gone, and it is a thing of the past. Some parties, I have been informed, have made the remark that my advertisements are rather fishy, and I think it is a scaly thing for them to make such remarks, but I wish to inform them that I can shell out on Christmas and New Years, and if they doubt my word let them drop in on New Year's eve on their way to or from midnight service and they can see me shelling out the Oysters and assist in spending the parting year and welcoming the incoming New Year.

Please give the York Street Restaurant a bumper house to-morrow night as I want lots of cash as my wardrobe is getting down and I've got to pay the tailor a visit.

To my numerous customers I take this opportunity of wishing a Happy and prosperous New Year.

Since Byron wrote "'Tis Greece, but living Greece no more," the famous little kingdom has brightened up considerably, and now it is very much alive. The population of Athens has increased during the century from 10,000 to 100,000, and the city has now steam and horse railroads.

SURE TO SATISFY.—There are many remedies for coughs and colds, but there are few that proves so satisfactory as Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, which is a pleasant and reliable cure for all throat and lung troubles, including bronchitis, asthma, croup, whooping cough and the pulmonary complaints of young or old.

A blossom of such saccharine properties has been discovered in British India that it is destined to revolutionise the sugar business of the world. It is the flower of the Mahwa, or Mools, a tree of large size which abounds in the southern portion of Hindustan. This blossom has a sweet taste and yields one-half of it's weight in sugar.

West's Cough Syrup is now the leading remedy for coughs, colds, sore throat, bronchitis, asthma, whooping-cough and consumption. All druggists.

The Fashionable Baby.

Fashionable babies are christened at home nowadays. Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock sharp a number of ladies and gentlemen of the town were gathered in an uptown drawing room. In the centre of the saloon stood a small table decorated with similax and white rosebuds and bearing a respouse silver bowl. The clergymen and the godparents took their places; the door opened and a bustling personage in stiff black silk appeared, bearing a bundle of white lace, and a very large white satin sash, somewhere in the folds of which was hidden the extremely small red specimen who was about to renounce the pomps and vanities of this wicked world. After the ceremony the little christian disappeared and the doors were thrown open for the slight refreshment demand at that hour. The table was decorated with a large oval mirror, around which was masked a bank of moss and similax, with a centre of Cornelia Cook rosebuds; at every plate was placed a little white basket, lined with silk and bound with soft white ribbons, the ends painted in gold letters, with the date and the name of the small hostess, which luckily for her, was the sweetest of all vowel combinations, "Alice." These baskets were filled with French mignonette and "tea" buds. Caudle was first served in small pink cups, on which was painted a small medallion of a baby's head. But the feature of the entertainment was babies in ice cream, frozen stiff and fast, like so many little dolls, and resting on knees of spun glass. Nobody had the heart to eat them, or we should be able to satisfy the curiosity wakened by Dean Swift, who, you will remember, always felt he would like to have had a taste of a tender young infant, and gave great offence to the reviewers by recommending them as an article of diet. When we were leaving, each guest was presented with a small box filled with white almonds (which go with christenings as naturally as do candle and raisins) and a big artificial rose, white to the ladies and red to the gentlemen. Hanging from the stalk were three small foreign gold coins, and in the centre of each rose a little silver baby was hidden, with "Alice" engraved on its back. The godparents got blue roses and a gold image.

AGRICULTURE.

Poultry on the Farm.

Poultry on a farm are as much a necessity as cows or hogs. What would many of the dishes which farmer's wives and daughters prepare for the family be if it were not for the hen fruit they contain? But poultry to be profitable should run at large. They are good foragers, will destroy vast numbers of injurious insects, and at certain seasons of the year should be allowed free to every part of the farm, including the garden. No better place can be found for a hen and chickens in the spring of the year than the garden. As soon as the chicks are able to run about confine the hen in the coop in the garden, sufficiently open to allow the chicks to run in and out, changing the same to a fresh place daily, and the chicks will then live principally on insects. The benefits to be derived from so doing are a great saving of food, a healthier, and more rapid growth of chicks, the garden kept clear of insects, and better fruit and vegetables the result.

That there is a difference in the various families of fowls none will dispute, and the question then is, which is the best for the farmer to keep—that is, which are the easiest to raise and return the most profit. Among the different breeds of fowls some persons prefer one and some another. The Black-Breasted Red Game is good.

Manure and Crop Rotation.

Very much depends on the amount of manure made on the premises, as it regards the kind to use. For instance, a farm that cropped every year and the product hauled off and sold, and where but little live stock is kept, such a farm will be impoverished sooner and require fertilizers to be brought, than the farm where live stock of different kinds are kept, enough to consume the product of the soil and sell said stock.

There is no doubt in a series of years together on the most of farms the stock farm will pay the best. I have noticed straw stacks to stand one, two and three years in some localities, and in time wearing away by wind and weather, whereas if said straw had been fed to stock it would have made a large amount of manure, besides the advantages given to the stock. On heavy clay land I prefer coarse manure plowed under; and a rotation of crops is the best.

After land has laid to grass several years, haul out the long manure, put it in corn; the second year in oats, the third to wheat, stock down to timothy and clover, cut three or four crops of hay or pasture as required, then again the rotation.

If there is rotten or decomposed manure, scatter it an inch thick and harrow in with the wheat or haul out through the winter and scatter over the wheat. By pursuing the above course, land need never be worn out. Where many vegetables and root crops are raised a little different course may be pursued.

American Enterprise and Ingenuity.

A Train is now running between New York and Boston, which is not only heated by live steam drawn from the locomotive, but is lighted by the incandescent electric light. There is therefore but one fire in the entire train, and that one is the boiler furnace. The steam-heating system is supplied with steam from the dome of the boiler by an automatic pressure valve, and the heat in each car can be regulated by a special valve. The incandescent lamps, of which there are twenty or sixteen candle-power in each car, are supplied with electricity from a nest of Julien storage batteries, and the lightening system of each car is independent of the others. The light is pure, clear and steady, and the cars are so brilliantly lit that it is possible to read in them with pleasure. The electric lighting system in use on this train is probably as expensive as it appears to be perfect, and it would be too much to ask that all passenger trains should be equipped with it, but the steam heating system is economical as well as safe.

When all so-called remedies fail, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures.
