Capt. Gram Tells of Finding Scott.

Fort William, May 5.—On his way to attend the royal geographical society convention in London, Eng., Capt. Trygve Gram, passed through this city from the west to-day. Capt. Gram was a member of the Scott expedition to the South Pole and was one of the party which discovered the remains of the heroic commander and the others who perished on their return journey from the Pole. Capt. Gram denied emphatically that the loss of Capt. Scott and his companions could be blamed on any of the others of the party. The cause of the disaster, according to the Norwegian, can be laid only at the door of fate, who, while apparently camping on the trail of Capt. Amundsen, left the British party to the mercies of the elements and piled obstacle after obstacle in their way, until at last, after having reached their goal, the party that made the final dash was forced to give up the fight when practically within sight of the depot at One Ton camp on the return journey. In speaking of the finding of the three bodies in their tent, Capt. Gram said that Capt. Scott, who was the last of the party to die, had wrapped Wilson and Bower in their sleeping bags and both of them looked just as they had in life. One of them even wore a smile, which Capt. Gram said he had often seen on his face during life. Capt. Gram expects to leave with a party to explore the Himalayas after the meeting in London.

"All the News All the Time."

The Telegram's premier position as the People's Paper with the largest circulation and containing all the news all the time is disturbing the equanimity of the Honorable Editor of the Herald, because we "accused" him in publishing the returns of the sealfishery. Friday, he criticizes the Telegram. He must realize that he has no lien on the news of the city and that there are others in the journalistic world as well as he. Does he remember publishing a patent medicine picture for Bruce Ismay, the Chairman of the White Star Line? A few days ago he had one Gertrude Bussey escaping from the Hospital and wrote a most lurid story of the terrible experiences she underwent. It was Annie Stead who escaped on Tuesday night last, but the journalistic sage of the Herald was not aware of this. Gertrude Bussey escaped some months ago.

New Company for Rossley's.

Mr. Jack Rossley, proprietor of the Star Theatre, has engaged a new dramatic and vaudeville company which will open their engagement on the arrival of the s.s. Stephano. They are coming direct from New York City, where they have just concluded a big engagement. For over a year Rossley has tried for this troupe and at last has been successful in securing them, and the patrons of the Star Theatre will be pleased to see a group of new faces. Shadrick and Talbot and Orth and Burkhardt will finish their engagement this week. Rossley is to be complimented on his success, for his talented wife and daughter have done a lot to try and please the people of St. John's, and we trust this engagement of a new company will be as successful as the rest.

Senator Works.

Senator Works, he ups and jerks a brand new kind of caper; no tales of crime, in prose or rhyme, he'd have in any paper. The daily sheet won't dare repeat a yarn of scrap or riot, but it may print a timely hint of moral things and quiet. It dare not spring a grisly thing, though greatly it may need it; that sheet might prove a helpful move—but who, O Works, would read it. Of Epworth rules and Sunday schools it might print all the tidings; of picnic jaunts in woodland haunts afar from railway sidings. And if some duck should run amuck and kill a gross of people, the sheet must tell about the bell bought for the village steeple. The sheet must skip the sporting tip, all news of Luth Mc Certhy, and print a ream about the cream served up at Jimpson's party. The scheme of Works sure beats the Turks—may guardian angels speed it! Oh, such a sheet would be too sweet—but who in Troy would read it? Senator Works should hire some clerks, engage a legislator, to toll for years like brinded steers reforming human nature. Then tales of crime, perhaps, in time, no more will be demanded; and sheets that print in crimson tint crime stories will be stranded.

Selling Wife's Boots.

Saturday afternoon, Sergt. Mackey discovered an outport man buying a pair of woman's boots from a resident of the city. Knowing that the man was a hard drinker, he discovered that he was selling to buy drink. Sergt. Mackey took the boots and restored them to the unfortunate wife and sent the seller and would-be purchaser about their business.
