In Petrograd.

It is just as well to be accurate. If we form our opinion of Russia from what goes on in Petrograd, we make a great mistake. The two names stand for very different things, as the traitors in the capital will very likely soon discover. All we need say with regard to the whole dark situation in Russia is a word or two deprecating undue pessimism. Whatever happens there cannot do the Allies much more harm than they have already suffered. Russia has been a passenger in the war for a year. She will never go over to the enemy, and the worst that can happen is that Germany may be encouraged by the reign of anarchy which she has established there to deem herself safe in removing still more troops to the other fronts. And there must be a limit to that process.

The truth is, Kerenky, great as he has shown himself, has failed to handle what must be confessed an almost impossible problem. His fundamental mistake has lain in an attempt to reconcile incompatible elements. He is a Socialist, and the Socialists have been mainly responsible for what has happened. They have never subscribed to the policy of the anarchists who now rule in Petrograd, the Bolsheviks, pro-Germans, Workmen and Soldiers and the rest, but by inaction and acquiescence have allowed them to go to the greatest lengths, including the worst thing of all, the corruption of the army. They have now, of course, got out of hand—in Petrograd. Kerenky made another mistake in not moving the Government long ago to Moscow, the true heart of Russia and not rotten, like Petrograd, with spies and traitors. And he made the worst mistake of all in suppressing Korniloff, with whom he might have made, and may yet make, an alliance which could have wrought Russia's salvation.

What will now happen? It is not difficult to predict at least the broad consequence of the rebellion, civil war. Everything depends upon the extent of the hold which the rebels have gained upon the army. It is inconceivable that a party headed by Lenin and Trotsky, men in the pay of the German government, will be permitted to hold undisputed sway for long. They will disclose themselves at once by negotiating with Germany for peace, and that even hopelessly disorganized Russia will not tolerate. If Kerenky is in Moscow, he will rally around him loyal statesmen and troops, that is, if his leadership is accepted and he is not replaced by some stronger military spirit. The Cossacks are loyal and will fight Lenin to a man. If the great body of the nation, the peasants, prove loyal also, the situation will be redeemed. It may be all for the good that matters have come to this head at last, and that Russia should be purged by the blood-letting which seems the only chance of her recovery.

Undoubtedly, Russia and Italy today present pictures that are none too bright to our eyes. But they are far from hopeless and there are others which can be set over against them. In Flanders the British are ready to drive Germany from the Belgian coast, nothing less. They may attempt to do so at once, as soon as the weather permits; or, as is more likely, they may make the life of the enemy opposite them an inferno through the winter and crush in the battered lines like an eggshell in the spring. Success follows success in the minor theatre in Asia, where the British are extending their arms simultaneously up the coast of Palestine and the banks of the Tigris. And there is another picture which we are not permitted to see, but from which the veil is lifted now and then to reveal some of its terrible details. It is the picture of famine, gaunt and horrible, stalking through the Central Empires. There are many who do not believe it, but they are those who do not believe anything until it happens, when they are usually the first to say that they knew it all along. Germany and Austria are starving. Such a mass of evidence reaches the outer world through neutral channels, Holland, Switzerland, and Scandinavia, as it is impossible to dispute. The starvation is not yet apparent, because the civilian populations are being first drained and sucked dry that the armies may be sustained. Germany's small supply of vital necessities like oil and fats, cotton, rubber and leather, is being rapidly consumed and there is absolutely no further source to draw upon. The theory is held by many that famine, not strategy, has impelled the excursion into Baltic Russia and the tremendous drive into Italy. If it be so, the end is near. Nothing Germany can do in Russia will help her in her need. As for Italy, when Mackensen reaches the Piave River he will have shot his bolt. He will be held there. If he is held in a deadlock, he will have done tremendous harm. But it is not likely at this stage. He will either win outright or Jose outright. It matters not that he has prepared the line of the Tagliamento behind him. If he is driven back upon it he will never stand there. Germany may well experience another Marne; she has not the strength to sustain another Aisne.

Major Walter Rendell

ADDRESSED LARGE AUDIENCE AT LLEWELLYN CLUB.

"The making of a Soldier in the Newfoundland Regiment" was the subject chosen by Major Walter P. Rendell, who delivered last night one of the most interesting lectures ever heard at the Llewellyn Club. Rev. Dr. Jones, President of the Club, presided and introduced the gallant Major. The latter on stepping to the platform was given a right royal reception, and in his opening remarks expressed the pleasure it gave him on being privileged to speak to so large an audience. Almost everybody, he said in this city has somebody who is now or has been at Ayr and no doubt they had heard of the wonderful kindness extended our fighting men in all parts of Scotland. So numerous were the invitations to the men to attend concerts, sociables, theatres, etc., that the men felt a kind of bashfulness in attending them, and if given their choice preferred paying their way to a show and taking a friend along with them. At Fort George they were entertained by parties who came from miles away for the purpose.

Physical training has a wonderful effect on the recruit and after three weeks of training the results are surprising. In route marching, one of the principal things is care of the feet, which must be bathed on the return, and on one occasion at Ayr following a tramp, some of the boys not only bathed their feet but unsnipped and bathed, despite the fact that it was February. Their physique was so admired at Edinburgh that the battalion had to parade for physical drill in Prince's Street Gardens three times a week to attract recruits to the Scottish regiments. Another proof of the physique of Ours was demonstrated by a volunteer, who was formerly a sailor, who howled over five big Scottish policemen who attempted to arrest him for being drunk. When the Commanding Officer apologized for his conduct to the Brigadier, the latter only expressed the opinion that "if we had more like him in the army we would clean up the Huns in quick time."

Another sample of the kind of stuff "Ours" are made of was shown in the big storm at Gallipoli, when other regiments suffered hundreds of casualties and "Ours" had none. It was here that C. Co. held the whole brigade line and it was through this that Major Bernard won his Military Cross.

The Major then spoke of the development of character or personality, which word describes the difference between the British and German soldiers. The former is trained to use his own initiative, while the latter has no individuality and has to fight in masses. Discipline is really a moral force, which makes the difference between a crowd of armed men and an army. The measure and worth of discipline was strikingly illustrated by "Ours" on July 1st, 1916, when they went forward as on parade, knowing as they did that the advance guards had been wiped out. This is the kind of discipline that is needed for victory.

At Gueudecourt on Oct. 12th, 1916, a wounded man of "Ours" was making his way back when he came across a German who was there for no good purpose, and not being able to take him along was about to bomb him when stopped by an officer. On returning with help, the latter was informed by the Private that he had not thrown the bomb, but the Hun was new quiet—and he wiped his bayonet. The gas used by the British is the best in the world, being more deadly than any gas but mine gas, and as that cannot be collected we have beaten the Germans at their own game. The liquid fire used by the Germans can only be thrown about 40 yards while ours carries 200 yards and also drops an inflammable substance, one drop of which consumes anything it touches. So terrible is the effect that the military authorities only use it on special occasions. Gas is effective for eight miles when blown by a favourable wind.

Life at the front is not so bad as it is made out to be, as some interesting and enjoyable times are spent in billets. The spirit of our men was once clearly demonstrated when, on was capable of healing a bad running sore, from which my husband suffered, until he used Zam-Buk. writes Mrs. B. Ellis of Castle-on, Ont. "The sore, which was on his foot and was caused by frost-bite, had penetrated to the bone. The pain he suffered from the inflammation was so bad that he could not sleep. He tried every remedy he had ever heard of."

nothing gave him relief until he tried Zam-Buk. Within two hours after the first application the pain was eased. With perseverance the inflammation was drawn out and the swelling reduced. The pain then entirely disappeared and soon the sore was completely healed. You cannot make a mistake in using Zam-Buk for eczema or any skin trouble, and it is equally good for boils, ringworm, blood-poisoning and piles. All dealers Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. the raising of a draft for the front, 14 of "Ours" appeared in hospital clothes and asked to be sent back to the firing line, one had already lost two brothers and another wounded. Major Rendell drew a rough sketch of the ground over which "Ours" had fought at the battle of Menchy, in which Col. Forbes Robertson and Capt. Keegan and a handful of men made the heroic stand that saved the day for the whole British Army, and by their initiative prevented 20,000 Germans, massed in a wood, from attacking and breaking through the line.

At the close of the lecture a hearty vote of thanks, proposed by Mr. R. Dowden and seconded by Mr. A. Carrell, was tendered Major Rendell by Rev. Dr. Jones.

But the Tide is Rising.

London Daily News.—It is pointed out to them that their case is obviously hopeless in the long run, with four-fifths of the world in arms against them, with their industrial system already at a standstill, their financial position desperate, and their people being steadily bled to death in misery and starvation? They reply stolidly that they have conquered Belgium; that they have overrun Poland and Serbia; that a great part of France is still in their hands; and that these facts entitle them to claim the victory and dictate a "German peace." They are like a chess player who, though his position is hopeless, should still claim the game on the ground that he had taken the larger number of pieces; or like a man marooned on a rock below high water mark who should seek to console himself by the reflection that even if the tide be rising it is rising inch by inch.
