"For five or six years I had Dyspepsia in its worst form, sometimes completely prostrated; so much so that it was impossible for me to work more than half an hour at a time. I had tried various remedies but did not receive any benefit, when I was recommended by a friend to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I have taken two bottles and feel like a new man. I can eat and drink anything I like. I never felt better. I cannot praise Hood's Sarsaparilla too much for not only has it cured me of dyspepsia but also of rheumatism." JAMES FERGUSON, St. John, New Brunswick.

SOLDIER SLUGGERS.
A very interesting seven-inning game of baseball was played on Saturday afternoon on the Military School grounds between the team representing No. 1 Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, and the Pastimes, of the City League, the former winning by a score of 17 to 7. The attendance was large, and good order prevailed throughout the game, though a lot of good-humored chaff passed. For No. 1 Company Cook pitched a winning game, only six hits being made off his delivery, and three at intervals. He received splendid support. The home runs of Hawthorne, T. Grice and Gibbs, and the batting of the soldiers was especially good. The coaching of Grice for the Military players was worthy of note, not so much on account of his powerful voice, but the way he has of expressing himself—a manner peculiar to the Ambitious City, whence he hails. Mr. J. Maxwell umpired, and gave general satisfaction throughout. Appended are the scores:

The Queen's Frisky Son-in-Law, Prince Henry, Has a Frolic in Spain—Irving Scores a Success as Don Quixote—Lord Beresford's Soft Matrimonial Snap—Roseberry's Serious View of the New Eastern Question—Cambridge May Resign the British Army Commandership.

London, May 6.—Now that Queen Victoria has returned home with her daughter Beatrice, the latter's husband, Prince Henry of Battenberg, has come back, too, and gives an account of his holiday-making, which he spent yachting in the Mediterranean and junketing in Spain with a few bosom friends.

If rumor speaks true, the prince has drawn a discreet veil over some of his adventures which his staid mother-in-law would scarcely approve. In Spain at any rate, the prince had a really good time, and his exuberant spirits nearly got him into trouble, and serious work upon more than one occasion. At Seville, for instance, he insisted on going to a fair with the rollicking Duke of Orleans, who has since, according to the official announcement, been badly hurt while hunting with the Duke d'Alba, Marquis de la Mina, and other young sprigs of the highest Spanish nobility.

In one of the tents, two of the beauties of Seville aristocracy danced Andalusian dances for the delectation of the princes, and the fun became uproarious. Prince Henry declared that his happiness required, for its completion, only a view of one of those broncos, or fights with knives, for which Seville fairs are famous, and he was not long left ungratified. It seems that the Duke of Orleans had, earlier in the day, taken the liberty of kissing one of the rustic beauties who crowded the fair. She did not resent the salute, but, unluckily, she had a sweetheart, who tried to get hold of the duke with intent to kill him. The duke was taken away, but an hour later the irate lover happened to see him watching the dancing in a tent, and at once began to shout fearful abuse at him. An effort to ignore the man's bad language had no effect, and finally the garoude de la Mina smote the fellow across his head with a walking stick.

Forthwith there arose a full-flavored bronca of more than sufficient quality and extent to gratify Prince Henry. Princes and dukes soon found themselves desperately defending the tent against an infuriated crowd of several hundred peasants. It would have gone hard with them had not the advance of the police created a diversion, which enabled them to escape by the back of the tent. It is believed that several of the royal party suffered slight stabs, and there is a persistent rumor that it is a serious wound received in this affair, and not a fall from a horse, which is keeping the Duke of Orleans in bed. The British newspapers, so far, have not breathed a word of Battenberg's share in the escapade. It is hoped, for remain silent, for the Queen would not easily pardon such a giddiness in her son-in-law.

IRVING AS DON QUIXOTE.

A new play by Mr. Irving is always an event in London. He created a new and very fascinating character Saturday night in Don Quixote. It was only in one act, a mere sketch, but two pathetic phases of the character in Cervantes' satire were presented with the incomparable skill of this actor. The quality of simple faith pervaded into insane exultation was a dangerous experiment upon the modern stage, but Mr. Irving made his Don as pathetic as he made him ridiculous, and the great audience was almost as bent and absorbed as a few years ago under the religious vagaries of Joan d'Arc as given by Bernhardt.

THE NEWLY WEDDED COUPLE.

The Duchess of Marlborough and her husband, Lord William Beresford—she retains her higher title—are still enjoying their honeymoon at Deep Deene, and, in fact, have decided to prolong their stay much beyond the fortnight originally intended. They drive out every day over the estate and Lord William is taking over the entire management of his wife's English property. As military secretary to two successive viceroys in India, he has had considerable experience in the arrangements of a large household. Much curiosity exists as to the question of settlement. Lord William, between his military pension and his family allowance, has a personal income of about £20,000 a year, and it is stated on good authority that the duchess has settled £10,000 ed at Brighton yesterday, and resulted in a victory for Latham, who wins the championship. The final score stood: Latham, 7; Saunders, 2 sets.

A club will probably be organized.

has received every possible attention from the various members of the English royal family. Her marriage will, of course, involve many international questions, and the reported desire of the Kaiser to arrange a marriage with his eldest son will, if ever seriously entertained, be almost certainly frustrated by the intense feeling in Holland against any possible union with Germany. Besides being the prospect of a ruler of a prosperous and contented kingdom, Wilhelm will come into a large fortune, increased largely during her long minority.

A CHURCH SENSATION.

The so-called sacerdotal party of the Church of England has made an unexpected, aggressive move, which has convulsed the entire church and may have important political developments. The occasion was an aristocratic marriage in London at which a prominent ritualistic parson, who had not been asked to attend, rose in the body of the church and objected to the performance of the ceremony on the ground that the bridegroom was a divorced man. As the gentleman was the son of a baronet, Sir Theodore Brinckman, and a very eligible match, the aristocratic congregation were greatly shocked at the idea of anybody interfering. As the officiating clergyman had received his fee, and a fat one, the ceremony was duly performed. It has since been learned that the protest was organized by the Duke of Newcastle and other leaders of the ritualist party, and is a part of a new policy by which they intend to shame the clergymen of the Church of England into refusing to marry divorced persons, no matter for what causes their first unions were severed by law.

The discussion, thus sensationally initiated, is now raging in the press and synods, and the ritualists loudly proclaim their intention of supporting disestablishment and the disendowment of the State Church rather than see it sanction any longer these "blasphemous, audacious unions."

Mr. Brinckman was defendant in a divorce case in January last, his wife receiving a decree nisi upon proof of her husband's unfaithfulness. The English law permits the remarriage of the guilty person at once. The case has caused such a social sensation that Mr. Tristram, chancellor of London, made a long statement about it at the session of the Consistory Court. The marriage to which objection was made this week was by special license from the Bishop of London. The chancellor rules that the bishop had no power under the law to refuse the license, nor had any clergyman the right to refuse the use of his church for the ceremony. Any clergyman might, however, decline to officiate.

THE DUCHESS' NECKLACE.

The pearl necklace of the late Duchess of Montrose, which was sold at auction the other day for the benefit of the poor of London for $62,000, is said to be almost unrivalled. It is composed of seven rows containing 362 finely graduated pearls, with a diamond tablet snap. It is understood that the pearls had been collected with the utmost care, so that the like of such a necklace, for size, color and faultless matching, can hardly be found. Experts in the jewelry business have declared that only three necklaces exist which can be compared for the splendor of symmetry and dimensions with these seven rows. It was knocked down at auction amid an excited crowd of would-be buyers. Two of these three necklaces mentioned as possible rivals belong to queens. The third is the property of a wealthy family.

THE NEW CZAR.

The painter Tuxen is at present quartered in one of the Imperial palaces at St. Petersburg as the guest of the Czar, and is treated with unusual consideration. He is engaged upon a great picture representing the Imperial wedding in November last, at which he was present and took many sketches. The picture is said to be intended as a gift to Queen Victoria, but a reduced copy will be given to the young Empress. The talk in St. Petersburg is that Czar Nicholas promises to be a model husband and father, and that his wife's influence over him grows daily. The reform party still clings to the hope that the Czar's political and social policy cannot fail to be affected for good by that influence, and the more moderate members of the Nihilist party, sharing his optimism, are steadily endeavoring to restrain the extremists, who read in his Majesty's recent speech to a visiting delegation a declaration of war against Liberalism in every form.

CAMBRIDGE MAY RETIRE.

There was an important conference at the War Office on Wednesday last between the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Connaught, Lord Wolsley, Lord Roberts, of Kandahara, and Lieut. Gen. Sir Redvers Buller, and it revived the rumors of the approaching retirement of the Duke of Cambridge from the post of commander-in-chief. This would be most welcome news to the public, as his continued retention of the office which the Hartington commission advised the total abolition of, means an immense pecuniary loss to the country. It is stated that Lord Roberts of Kandahara, will succeed Lord Wolsley at Dublin as commander of the forces in Ireland, Lord Wolsley taking the newly-created post of chief of the staff at headquarters, should the Duke of Cambridge retire.
