MR. BOURASSA ON FRENCH CANADA

Says It Is Loyal But Decidedly Anti-Imperialistic.

French-Canadians Provincial in Patriotism, But Attached to Country and Crown.

Hall Monday on the occasion of his address, "The Loyalty of the French-Canadian." The occasion was in the inauguration of a series of addresses court sadly: by the public men of the Dominion under the auspices of the Continental Union. President W. A. Sherwood, FRIDAY'S HEAVY SNOWFALL Secretary James L. Hughes, Ald. J. J. Graham, J. Castell Hopkins, J. M. Clark, W. D. Gregory, Rev. Dr. Wild, R. G. Summerville, T. W. Dudgeon, P. F. Cronin and R. C. Steele occupied seats on the platform. Several hundred were present, and much applause Few people realize the weight of forts of French-Canadians to contri-

Mr. Bourassa was received with a round of applause. In a close analysis of the French-Canadian's relation to the Dominion, of a historical and patriotic character. Mr. Bourassa took occasion to breath much national sentiment. This was the cardinal principle of the race that for feet. This made the weight a generations had been proud to announce their allegiance to the British nation. But while the English section of Canada would say they stood for "King and country," the French section used the second for the second fo tion used the same words, but would put it "For country and King," the English-Canadian need not be afraid of the sectional and racial opposition published along that line. On the whole it was an appeal for a greater Canada+for Canada as a nation-for greater breadth of autonomy and more independent action, but not separation from the empire to which organization the French-Cana dian did not surrender to his English brother one iota of loyalty. Mr. Bourassa pleaded for the broad British sense of justice in ception of things relating to Canada. breadth was necessary in the founding of a nation such as he conceived Canada was destined to become It was a nation of two races. This made the amalgamation more difficult but none the less certain. In judging French-Canadian he conceived there were two schools among the other element in the Dominion—one that gave them credit for having contributed in a measure to British dom-ination in this part of America, and the other according the race little place in the history of Canada-mak.

There were four facts not to be lost sight of in analyzing the situation as the speaker viewed it. One, that the French-Canadian is not an inferior race; two, that they are a race by theirselves; three, though united they are a different race; four, that they are anti-Imperial, but still Canadians. With this division he plunged into his subject, first insisting that though anti-Imperial, the French element in Canada was not anti-Entish. He thought his race had played well its part in the sturdy development of Canada. Turning over the pages of history, he asked his audience to remember that the present French element in Canada and the United States developed from some sixty thousand peasants whose blood had not been replenished from the other side in 150 years. The present progress he consicered splendid under the circum-

Mr. Bourassa thought there was mixed sentiment among the French-Canadians toward the British-half o' admiration and half of distrust. On the subject of contributing to imperial defense, Mr. Bourassa thought in constructing great railroad systems improving the waterways and the appreach to the ocean the country had contributed at the rate of about $10,-000,000 annually to the imperial defense. At the same time the country had been developed substantially. He thought one young French-Caradian who helped develop the trade, the substantial interests of Canada, was worth a dozen men who wore long swords; tinsel and gold braid and went camping once a year at the expense of the country. It was not to the advantage of the best in the nation to develop a spirit of militarism, nor desirable for the youth of the country to be taught that it was the destiny of the nation to run around over the globe provoking quarrels with other nations. He thought Canadians best qualified to say what was best for Canada: British to determine what was best for England: Australia in the best position to decide what is best for that country. In military matters he was sure they would oppose any con-tributions not strictly for the defense of Canada. With the English Canadians he thought these questions those of sentiment, but with the French element they were those of reason, purely He could not see that flags, tinsel and music were necessary attributes to genuine patriotism. French-Canadians he confessed, were provincial in their patriotism, and if the feeling wa broadened he feared it would be weak ened, but there was common attachment to the country, to the flag and to the crown. In closing Mr. Bourassa declared he was not ashanied of the charge that stirred up the national sentiment of the race he represented. The Canadian Catholic Union entertained Henri, Bourassa at a dinner i the King Edward Hotel yesterday evening. After dinner he spoke a fewords in reference to the Catholic

Gets Little Return.

Waterbury, Conn., Nov. 11.-John C. Hall, of Berlin, a rural Beau Brummel, aged 60, and a bachelor, insists that he has a right to do with his money as he chooses. His relatives take a different view. They have appealed to the judge of probate of New Britain to stop him from lavishing his money on country maidens. A Southington wo-man of whom John is enamored, according to the testimony, has a fine piano, the gift of Mr. Hall, and a Meriden girl, the most recent recipient of his favor, has just had a piano sent to her, valued at more than $300.
