AUSTRALIA'S POPULATION PROB LEMS.

The population of the Australian Commonwealth last year increased 78, 269, the excess of arrivals over depar tures being 13.150.

Though a somewhat better showing than that of 1907, it is considered far from satisfactory, and press and politicians are now realizing more than ever the urgent necessity of in some way encouraging immigration.

Australia, like Great Britain, continues to suffer from an unh, lthy concentration of a very large proportion of the population in a few of the chief cities.
