A three-base hit would win the game, but no one hardly dared to think that to hit the ball hard, but throughout the afternoon he was easy picking for Hagerman. The first ball pitched was a strike, but Jones steadled himself for the second one, met if fair on the nose, and drove it over to the centre field fence. It was a the most timely one ever made on the oid ball ground. It sent three runs in and won the game from those wonderful Reds.

demanded recognition of the union, and the men were told that if the clauses were insisted upon, it appeared sion of the Association of American to be useless to go any further, as the cumstances concede the demand.

Ald. Douglass said the question of recognizing the union was the greatest stumbling block in the way of a settle ment, and Ald. Rumball asked what would be the object of demanding recognition of the union if the company agreed to arbitrate all differences which could not be otherwise satisfactory to all parties.

To this Mr. Crawford replied that without recognition the men on the road would continue in the same position as before the strike. It was for them. The Cordage people, in their plea, held that no consideration was or no union at all. The men thought necessary to have the road all union given, but that the factory was rented there was nothing unfair in their demands, and until the company granted them, they could operate the cars with the men now at work. The strikers' representatives maintained that the men in Cleveland had secured recognition, all reports to the given against the company on the contrary notwithstanding, and that ground that Bannerman Bros. acted in the London employes were not asking for more than the Cleveland men had demanded. Ald. Parnell told the strikers' committee that he believed a settlement possible, if the question of the company would deal with a com the men, individually, if the union was thus showed in the association's we would take out another car. After a discussion of the wages question, which was next in import ance to that of the union, the strikers committee agreed to submit a proposi tion to the union to-morrow morning, and give the aldermen the union's decision at 11.30 o'clock. The proposition is that the men waive the question of
