THE OPPOSITION'S PLATFORMS.

The wage-earners of Vancouver have certainly set their stakes well to the front all along the line, the platform by them being in every respect, as will be seen, a radicat and a most advanced one. Besides indicating reforms that can only be gradually worked up to, and others with respect to which there is legisimate ground for difference of opinion, the platform in question contains some immediately practical planks, the principle, at least, of which will commend itself to most, such as removing all obstacles to free representation, the provision that members of the legislature should resign at the request of a twe-thirds majority of their constituents, the declaring of election days legal holidays, the recommendation of the re-erendum and the clauses relating to the ownership and control of public services and taxation.

It will be observed that the Columbian The wage-earners of Vancouver have cer

It will be observed that the Columbian did not object to, or express disapproval of, a single plank of the Union Hall platform, Its endorsation was as full as it could possibly give to any merely human production. It declared it to be in every respect "a most advanced one." There is the readers of the Columbian the very slightest reason to infer that the writer of the article, or those whose opinions it expressed, differed from the framers of the platform in any single particular. The idea conveyed by the language of the Columbian is that some weak-kneed oppositionist might see grounds for differing with some planks of the platform, but for its part it agreed with the "advanced" platform, and would endeavor " gradually to work up " to its " reforms."

The Premier or any one else who read the Columbian's hearty acceptance of the platit it had been adopted by the Columbian and the party of which it is the organ. The Columbian had accepted the declaration of the principles and aims of the wage-carners of Vancouver as heartily and as unreservedly as the platform of any party is accepted by those who adopt it as their political creed. No party is so intolerant or so arbitrary as not to admit that there may be legitimate grounds for difference of opinion on some of the articles of its creed. There are essentials and non-essentials in every body of political doctrine. But it is to be again observed that the Columbian did not even hint disapproval of any one of the sixteen planks of the Union Hall platform, and we must also direct attention to the fact that planks of the Union Hall platform, and we life itself.

Is it that representation by population would not go down with the electors of Nansimo district, and that the purchase of the Vancouver Island Bailroad and the lands belonging to the Company is too big a pill for the Vancouver and New Westminster electors to swallow? The OPPOSITION'S PLATFORMS.

That delightfully absurd newspaper, the Westminster Columbian, in a late issue accused the Premier of stating what was cused the Premier of stating what was cused the Premier of stating what was deliberately untrue when he said that "one of the chief planks of the Westminster platform was representation by population." Our contemporary says that representation by population was a plank of the Vancouver platform, and it suits it now to say it did not accept that plank when it endorsed the Union Hall platform. Let us, in order to see whether this is correct or not, examine the terms of the Columbian's endorsation. After reproducing that platform in full in its editorial columns, it said:
