

conspicuous in her through the long period of nearly eighty years. We have every reason to believe that she was robed with her Baptismal innocence at the tribunal of her Father and Judge. This abridged relation can merely be considered as a very imperfect account of the life and actions of this illustrious woman. It can merely be considered, I repeat, as a slight sketch of what she so magnanimously accomplished ; still, imperfect as it is, it suffices to awaken the esteem and authorize the veneration of the pious mind for the Beloved one of God's own choice. The opinion of the day respecting her exalted virtues may be gathered from a few of the letters addressed to the Lady Superioress of the Congregation de Notre Dame, on the death of her saintly Mother.

His Lordship of St. Valier, Bishop of Quebec, writes thus: "The grief into which the intelligence of the death of your Foundress has plunged me is relieved, but by the consoling consciousness, that she is now in the home of
