ORLEANS v. AUSTRALIANS.

On the 22nd and 23rd ultimo the Australians played their third match in England at Twickenham. As Blackman and Bannerman were both a little out of health, they stood down to make way for McDonnell and Bonnor, the latter of whom made his first appearance as a member of the present team. The presence of such cricketers as the Brothers Grace, Messrs. A. P. Lucas, A. G. Steel, and Webbo on the Orleans side, led to the belief that the Australians would, for the first time since their arrival, meet with their match; and so it proved, although the club would have fared badly had it not been for the brilliant display of A. P. Lucas. His unwearying defence at the outset helped mainly to break the Australian bowling, and his innings of 87 not out, following as it has so closely on his first score of 145 for Mr. Thornton's eleven against Cambridge, must be accounted an extraordinary performance. W. G. Grace, despite his recent illness, hit with vigour, more freely than hitherto. The Australian fielding was all round very good, but excepting that of Palmer, the bowling had no great sting in it. Spofforth was again a failure, and Murdoch at the wicket was certainly not a success. Again, as at the Oval in 1880, the Colonial captain showed how bravely he can play an uphill game, and on this occasion, as then, he was entirely instrumental in saving his side. Pilling allowed an easy chance of running him out when he had only got eight to escape, but with the exception of one uppish hit in front of the wickets, he never made anything like a mistake, and his coolness and judgment at a critical time were as remarkable as ever. Under the circumstances his display was an extraordinary one. He was in four hours and a half, playing some of the very best English amateur bowling without a fault. Score:
