

Telephone Transmitter. — The invention relates to transmitters of the type commonly known as the granular carbon type and has for its object the provision of means whereby vibrations at the centers of the speaking diaphragms are not directly communicated to movable electrodes but are permitted to decrease in amplitude without causing corresponding fluctuation in transmitted telephonic currents so that the frequency of such transmitted currents is reduced whereby such currents are adapted to be transmitted over longer distances, the transmitter of this invention thus being of particular service for long distance telephony. — Roscoe Royal, Chicago, Ill., Assignor to Corwin Telephone Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill. — 1,040,637.

You can save about one-half in single runs of cable by using "STANDARD" Steel Tape Armored Cable laid directly in the ground instead of the usual lead-covered cable installed in clay conduits.

Many thousands of feet of our armored cables, installed in this manner, have been giving satisfactory service for years.

"STANDARD"

Steel Tape Armored Cable

is specially satisfactory and economical for ornamental lighting systems where low first cost and durable construction are desired, also for other low tension underground distributing systems.
