

DEATH OF T. M. HARRIS.

[FROM THE BRANTFORD EXPOSITOR OF FRIDAY,
AUGUST 31ST, 1894.]

THE announcement in our issue of last Monday, that the condition of Mr. T. M. Harris was gravely critical, in some slight measure paved the way for the shock with which the community learned, this morning, that during the silent watches of the night he had passed away over the river to the home beyond. The regret expressed on all hands at the early removal of Mr. Harris is genuine and widespread. Only a short while ago he seemed to move around with his usual elasticity of step, his kindly greeting and his pleasant smile for all.

For two months prior to his visit to New York, Mr. Harris had, however, been far from well. His condition began to cause anxiety to his relatives and friends, and to baffle the skill of his medical adviser. Within a few days of two months ago, he was advised to repair to New York and consult a specialist for Bright's disease, with which he was affected. Though having every confidence in his own physician, Mr. Harris consented to visit New York and there placed himself under the care of an eminent specialist, Dr. Salisbury.

For some time the change of air and the efforts of Dr. Salisbury seemed to afford Mr. Harris considerable relief. The fears entertained for his recovery vanished, and it seemed as if he would soon be restored to excellent health. The improvement was not of a permanent character, and
