entered the store of a Yonge street shoe merchant, yesterday afternoon, purchased a pair of insoles valued at fifteen cents, and presented a ten-dollar bill to cover the purchase. The merchant looked at the bill, which had been mutilated to the extent that a part from the centre of the bill was missing, and two sections attached with brown paper, and then at his customer. Apparently he knew what this sailor was, because he called P. C. McLellan (254) who was patrolling his beat, and ha dthe man placed under arrest.

The charge against Ackerman is attempting to obtain, money by fraud, but this may be changed to the more serious one of mutilating the currency when the man appears in court this morning.

Upon being taken to the station Ackerman's pockets were searched and there.

GERMAN ARMY REDUCED

Upon being taken to the station Ackerman's pockets were searched, and there the police claim to have found over $800 in bills of various denominations, but mostly issues of the Bank of Toronto. Examination of these revealed the fact that one—a ten dollar bill—resembled in appearance the one presented to the Yonge street merchant in that both were minus a part and both had been patched with brown paper.

Explanation of this peculiar coincidence as given by the police was to the effect that Ackerman had a get-rich-quick scheme of his own, whereby he excelled even Ponzi, the Boston wizard. The scheme employed by Ackerman, according to the police, was to take five bills all of the same denomination and issued by the same bank, cut a certain part from each and with the five detached parts produce another bill. The two remaining parts of each of the five mutilated bills were pasted together with a piece of brown paper, and to the casual observer it would seem that the bill had received rough usage and part had been lost. Thus in every five ten-dollar bills the Picton Ponzi had the means whereby he could manufacture another bill, and if the bills were of a higher denomination he would be that much richer.

Nelson. B.C., Oct. 1.—(Special).—
For two weeks the tariff commission has been in British Columbia and has in that time had expression of opinion on practically every industry in this province as to the economic policy best suited to its prosperity and development. On Monday in Calgary comes the evidence in rebuttal to the arguments of the Pacific province protectionists. There is no doubt of the fiscal sentiment in British Columbia. Its people are frankly protectionist. Only one free trader appeared before the commission, and he admitted that his views were personal, and not representative of any faction, class or industry.

British Columbia's staple industries are fishing, fruit-growing and lumbering. Mixed farming is on a small scale. Mining is a precarious occupation, but there are subsidiary industries that have been developed.
