

Men's Fall Footwear!

The cool mornings and evenings give testimony of the fact that soon men will need to put aside their low shoes as well as their straw hats.

We think it an opportune time to inform our customers that our new fall styles are now ready. Months ago we laid our plans for this fall's trade. We knew leather was going to be scarce, that prices would be high, and, anticipating the future, we would be able to suit our customers at practically old prices.

Never had we such a desirable range of good footwear.

Steamer Elaine Proves Popular

River Craft Taken From St. John to North Shore Cuts Ten Hours Off Gaspe Schedule

That the steamer Elaine, which formerly ran on the St. John river, has filled the needs of the service for which she was taken to the North Shore, is indicated by an eulogistic article in a recent issue of the Campbellton Tribune. Extracts from the article follow:

"Since the arrival of the S. S. Elaine here to go on the Campbellton-Gaspe route a large number of our citizens have inspected the steamer and are greatly pleased with her, and are unanimous in the opinion that she is just the boat for the service. Heretofore very large boats were placed on the route, many of which were entirely unsuited for the service. BRITISH AIRSHIPS OF ZEPPELIN TYPE

Are Far More Readily Handled Than the German Model; Will be Eyes of Fleet

London, Aug. 24.—Recently a sufficiently guarded description revealed the fact that Britain possessed a new class of airship comparable to some extent with the German Zeppelin. Neutral captains, it is said, arriving at certain east coast ports are enthusiastic in their admiration of the new airships. In their opinion the British model is far more readily handled and altogether less cumbersome than the German craft.

The difficulties which lay in the way of competing with the type of airship which is the result of Count Zeppelin's life work were serious. The small dirigible was not difficult to construct, and some time ago Great Britain was thoroughly supplied with that type. The large dirigible, corresponding to the Zeppelin, was a much more difficult thing to build, as it involved problems of aerostatics with which British constructors had little experience, and the fact that France, when she began her work on this subject, had not seen fit to create a Zeppelin fleet, indicated very clearly the difficulties in the way.

But it was Britain's business, for the real value of the great dirigible is its service for the fleet, and the naval problem is of course essentially hers. The problem to be solved involved questions of new forms of valve, new kinds of dope, new methods of welding, and structure, and the acquiring of sufficient quantities of aluminum, which happily did not prove very difficult. The further work to be tackled was the creation of air sheds to accommodate such monsters, and this involved an amount of labor and material on a vast scale. However, the difficulties have been overcome and the airships are built and ready. It will be a pity if the public jumps to the conclusion that Britain has now a new war arm with which to meet the Zeppelin raids. Zeppelin can no more fight with Zeppelin than submarine can with submarine. British Zeppelins have other work, and that is the most vital work for England that can be done. They are the eyes of the fleet.

"And did poor Joe accept his failure like a man?" asked the first.

"Exactly like a man," the second answered. "He blazed it on his extravagant wife."

How You Can Remove Every Trace of Hair

(Toilet Talk.)

A stiff paste made with some powdered deodorant and water and spread on a hairy surface about 2 minutes will, when removed, take every trace of hair with it. The skin should then be treated with a cream or ointment to soothe it. The hair will not grow back so fast, but it will be sure to come back if you get it and you will not be disappointed.

HELD PRISONER WITH A DEAD MAN

Patron of Crawford House, Boston, Crushed in Elevator

Boston, Sept. 14.—George H. Webster, 66 years old, living at 115½ Hampden street, Cambridge, night watchman at the Crawford House, was arrested, charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of a man who registered at the hotel as J. Stevens of Springfield.

Patrolman Chester Shaw of the Court street Station arrested Webster after he had been released from the elevator car, where he was held a prisoner as a result of the accident.

After Stevens had registered at the hotel he went out across the street. When he returned a few minutes later he stepped into the car on the office side of the hotel. There is a door on the rear of the car opening into a corridor, which leads to the dining room and the halls of the hotel.

Webster started the car, and the first he knew of the accident the car suddenly stopped. Webster was facing the office front of the car at the time. The clerk of the hotel, who had seen Stevens cross the office floor, heard a crunching sound, caused by the crushing of the body of the unfortunate guest, and he ran to the elevator to see what the trouble was.

Webster, who had not discovered what caused the car to stop suddenly, tried to start it again, and when the clerk confronted him he looked around and was horrified to see the body of the guest crushed between the edge of the floor of the car and the elevator well. The car was held fast between the office floor and the next landing. The body was motionless, and it was evident that Stevens was dead, having been probably instantly killed.

The police were notified and they called a surgeon and an ambulance from the Relief Hospital. When the surgeon was unable to do anything for the victim of the accident and it was found impossible to extricate the body, the fire department was notified.

Besides being unable to remove the body, it was impossible to move the car, and Webster was held a prisoner inside near the dead man. Webster is an old man, and he was badly affected by the accident and his terrible predicament. Members of Ladder Company 1 worked for an hour with jacks and axes, cutting away the doorway, the ceiling and side walls of the elevator well. The body was taken out at 4:10 and removed to the Relief Hospital, where Dr. Fraser said the man was dead. The body was then removed to the Northern District mortuary in North Grove street.

Webster was released on surety furnished by the hotel management. Webster told the police he was unable to explain how Stevens was killed, except that from his position it would appear that he had fell out of the car and was crushed through the rear door, which was open. The only witnesses in the case are Webster and the night clerk, and their stories were taken at police headquarters.

"And did poor Joe accept his failure like a man?" asked the first.

"Exactly like a man," the second answered. "He blazed it on his extravagant wife."
