THE SORROW OF TORONTO

Toronto's problem belt, as seen by Miss Betty D. Thornley, who writes of it in January Canada Monthly, is an extensive and important part of the city. The population of the problem belt is approximately two hundred and twenty thousand, or well on toward half the city's half million. This doesn't give a high rate per square mile, the American would say, accustomed as he is to the tenement house and its rabbit-warren tribe. But you must remember that, wisely or unwisely, Toronto has outlawed the tenement as a matter of course, and in consequence as a present problem that same one-family domicile packed from cellar to shingles with humanity that hasn't as yet been educated sub-wards.

But you and I can't think in thousands, any more than we can spend millions. We crossed to one house near the City Hall, and after visiting the basement, first and second floor, climbed to the third story stairs.

"For the love of Mike!" gasped the reporter, "they're clean!"

"Yes," said a thin little wisp of a slighting voice, "I asked the Lord for strength to clean 'em and I done it!"

On the top step sat an old woman of whom nothing seemed alive but the restless dark eyes. She had her chin on her hand and the fluff of her gray hair framed a face that might have been any age past the ones you believe in. She wouldn't have weighed a hundred pounds, and as she talked she shook and her voice shook and there wasn't a still thing about her but her indomitable soul.

"Mother of eight I was," she said, when she had recovered sufficient strength from the stairwinding to take us into her tiny dacha, a week hole under the eaves. "Five died in one week with black diphtheria and then himself was run over. Yes, Miss, yes, but I come to Canada with two and I was strong. Many's the time down near Port Credit that I'd milk nine cows afore breakfast and the little girl holdin' tight round me neck. Then I'd go back and make porridge and work in the fields all day."

"And is she dead?" the visitor asked softly.

The old eyes traveled wearily from the meager room, of somewhere past the slanting wall, through the single little window to the One Thing Left.

"I hope so, Miss," said the mother, who was sixty-eight and looked a hundred. "She went to New York and I heard she'd died."

There was a boy left, though, and it was partly for his big, bonny sake that the woman married again.

"Good he was to me, good," she crooned. "He'd kiss me'n his step-father goodly so sure's the mornin' for him to go to work. Then the Boer war come, Miss. He was one of the first to enlist, but he never lived to be sent home. I was coming died, too, and then after all Wilkins died, Miss, and now there's no one but me, a widow eight years."

THE SECRET OF GOOD DIGESTION

In perfect health, with regular and healthful action of the liver and kidneys, you need not know there is such a thing as digestion or indigestion. Unfortunately, however, modern life is artificial, and not many people avoid suffering more or less from troubles of this nature.

The great secret lies in keeping the liver and kidneys in health and vigor, for then the food is passed quickly along the alimentary canal, the nutritive portion being assimilated in the blood stream and the poisoned waste materials are passed out of the body.

When the liver and kidneys get wrong you will obtain relief most promptly and effectively by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. If chronic indigestion is to be cured it must be by inducing the action of these filtering and excretory organs. To persons who have thought only of the stomach as being the offending organ this may seem strange, but any competent physician will tell you this is correct.

In Fact The Royal Children's Quarters Are Outdone

THE ROXBURGE INFANT

Viscountess Wolsely, Landscape Gardener, Surprises Rich Client by Her Charges — Too Much Noise Causes Duchess to Let Her House to Whisky Distiller

(Times Special Correspondence.)

London, Jan. 8.—The superb nurseries at Floors Castle, that have been months in the making, are now ready for the Duke and Duchess of Roxburgh's little heir. In size and magnificence there is nothing to touch them, even among the royal nurseries. Half-a-dozen large rooms at the back of the castle are at the disposal of his small lordship. They are on the same corridor as that on which his parents' suite is situated. His day nursery is as big as a salon, with a great fireplace at either end. The ventilation on a new principle and the last word in hygiene.

The walls are in cream and the most charming carpet depicting a variety of nursery tales, especially women to the duchess's order, covers the floor. Around the walls are immense presses for the baby's toys which already contain gifts from many royalties, including Queen Mary, who sent him a rag doll she made herself for a Christmas present.

It is only since the arrival of the heir to the great white castle that his father would permit a telephone installation, the duchess representing to him that it was an absolute necessity in the event of his son being taken ill so that they could call a doctor. Some time ago when the baby had a slight cold, a local practitioner was called in and he noticed that the child wore sleeves to his frocks. "Dinna be foolish," he said to the duchess. "Take off them sleeves and wear him handy prices as Scotch balm should be reared." So off came the cambric sleeves and now only a big bow of the Roxburgh tartan is fixed on his shoulder.

He has three nurses, all Scottish women, who have been trained in children's hospitals. He takes excellently to his native heath and grows apace.

Gardening that Comes High.

Viscountess Wolsely, since she came into her title has taken the breath away from many of her clients by the enormous prices she is charging for laying out gardens, in the art of which she is an adept. There is, however, a slight hitch in connection with one transaction and unless the affair is settled out of court—legal documents have been forthcoming from Her Ladyship—the matter will form exciting reading.

She was asked by a rich man to lay out a part of the grounds in his newly acquired place in Kent. Being a rather nervous man and somewhat in awe of the aristocratic gardener he did not ask anything about prices so when some months later the bill came in for £1,500 when he expected it to be a few hundreds, it is easy to imagine what his face looked like. He wrote remonstrating, but soon learned the lady did not intend to abate a jot. She had never had an account questioned and she appeared to be of opinion that it was a daring feat on his part to do such a thing. Anyway, she is determined to stick out for what she considers her rights.

The Duchess of Manchester is sick of her house in Grosvenor Square and has let it to a great whisky maker, Sir Thomas Dewar, who is going to make things hum there next season. "No house in the world is of any use to me," said Her Grace, "if my children cannot sleep in it and the traffic in the square used to wake them up even when I had it used as a nursery put at the back? It will be remembered that Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, left this house to her son's wife with permission to do with it as she pleased. The duke delighted in the place and the gay parties he gave there in last June and July were the talk of London. All the new dances were tripped there for the first time and all the liveliest music hall ditties were sung there to perfection, while not a few artists from the "halls" put in an appearance and risked about in great form.
