The Commissioners of Highways in Halifax in 1830 were Henry H. Cogswell, George N. Russell, Joseph Allison HALIFAX N. S. E. KAULBACH, C. A.

Halifax in 1830 were Henry H. Cogswell, George N. Russell, Joseph Allison, James H. Tidmarsh and James Tremain. They had been but a short time in office when they reported that they found the furds, applicable to the road service, were burthened with debt, and that the sum placed at their disposal was not more than sufficient to smooth the surface and form the level of a part of the streets. They ascertained, what indeed was obvious to a common observer, that the side lines of the streets had been greatly eneroached upon and much encumbered by porches, steps, etc., and the surface line of but a small part of them definitely formed. Owing to the moeritainty where such lines would be permanently fixed, persons who were erecting buildings were much at a loss to know how to form the entrances to accommodate any future alterations in the streets. The upper parts of the town were occupied by poor persons, closely crowded in small houses, and many were living in the midst of filth and stench. Offal and putrifying substances of various kinds were suffered to accumulate in the yards and outhouses, until, by heavy rains they were washed into the streets, and part was carried along the gutters into the harbor, while other parts were scattered over the surface of the streets, to the great annoyance of the inhabitants.

search the space so omitted, and truly fortunate it was that they did so. Neither of the three saw the child until the little fellow, recognizing the servant, exclaimed, 'will you not take me home to mamma?' This affecting appeal thrilled through the hearts of his preservers, and turning round they saw him seated under a pile of hemlock windfalls cumpletely embosomed in a thicket, and playing with some pebbles. Contrary to all expectation, the child had not suffered severely from exposure and want of sustenance. It had eat nothing but a little sorrel, but had drunk very frequently of water."

The Commissioners urged, in view of the convenience, health and comfort of the people of Halifax, that common sewers be made from the harbor up to the Hill, in a westwardly direction, and also on the western side of every street running north and south—that all offensive matter washed or thrown into the streets might be instantly received into sewers and conveyed underground into the harbor. The sum of ten thousand pounds, at least, was, in their judgment, necessary to perfect this plan. The people of Halifax, it was claimed, were subject to the payment of heavy taxes upon two great necessaries of life—bread and fuel—to which other parts of the province were but little exposed. The argument was that while the payment of those taxes rendered the people of Halifax less able to raise the necessary sums by an increase of taxation to results. of the people of Halifax, that commo or those taxes rendered the people of Halifax less able to raise the necessary sums by an increase of taxation to repair the streets, it would appear to give them an equitable claim upon the proceeds of duties raised upon necessaries of life consumed in Halifax. It was the policy of almost all governments, however despotie, and where the liberal principle was not recognized as in Nova Scotia, that taxes should be applied to the benefit of those who paid them, to render bread as cheap, and streets as good and healthy as possible, in the metropolis. The Commissioners, therefore, recommend that $25000 should be expended during the summer of 1881, in the making of sewers and in the repairs of the streets—and they claimed from the legislature a share in the distribution of the monies voted for the road service of the province.

The School of Science meetings in this city — Archdeacon Armitage suggested they should make themselves acquainted with the history of Halifax.

Every now and again the papers report that a child has wandered from its home, and been lost in the woods searching parties are organised, and the little one is restored to its parents after an absence of at the most two days. A case occurred in September, 1828, in which a four year-old gon of a Mr. John Henderson, Ghatham Marsh, N. B., left its home and became lost in the woods. A diligent search was made and the child was found, after being lost from Saturday afternoon to the following wednesday night—the little one having been in the woods of September 18, gave the following account of the finding of the child:

The body of general Ross came in the Tonnant. The Diomade brought the soldiers wounded at the attack of Baltimore. At precisely 3 o'clock on the following day the body of General Ross was conveyed on shore, under a discharge of half-minute guns, and arrived at the King's wharf, where it was received by the grenadier company of the 64th regiment, and followed to the grave by all the principal naval and military officers and a large number of inhabitants.

A writer of that period remarked that mankind derived but little benefit In the last week of October, 1880, it was discovered by a star gaser in Halifax that there were to be seen on the sun's disc 36 spots occupying a space of about 72 millions of square miles—consequently it was explained, there was, just then, that number of miles of LESS rays of light emitted than would be in about xix days from that date. Most of these spots were distinctly seen to be holes completely. still more deeply impressed when com-bined with such feelings as were ex-cited by the mournful ceremony which consigned to an untimely grave the body of major-general Ross,

Of the distinguished soldier, who has now slept for nearly one hundred years in St. Paul's churchyard, it was said at the open grave: he was one of our best commanders—brave, active, enterprising and experienced; highly distinguished among those heroes who effected the deliverance of Spain, and who first inspired that spirit which enabled the Powers of Europe to break the shackles of almost universal slavery—an officer so much respected and beloved by the troops under his command, and so fully possessed of their confidence that no danger or difficulty could deter them from cheerfully following where he led the way. said at the open grave: he was one of Lawrence of the U. S. Chesqueake was interred in June, 1818. It was related that when the Shames and Chesqueake arrived in Halifax a generous concern was expressed for the fate of the brave Lawrence. The recollection of his humanity towards the crew of the British Peacock was still fresh in every mind. His obsequies were celebrated with appropriate ceremonials and an affecting solemnity. His pall was supported by the oldest captains in the British service that were in Halifax; and the naval officers crowded to yield the last sad honors to a man who was late their foe, but now their foe no longer. The group that gathered round the grave of Lawrence presented a seene worthy of the heroic days of chivalry. It was complete triumph of the nobler feelings over the savage passions of war.

Lawrence and, a little over a year later, of General Ross, in old St. Paul's churchyard, could be vividly recalled until, full of years, the youngest member of the community who was able to appreciate the very peculiar significance of the ceremonies, had passed into the "valley of the shadow."
