The basque, which is one of the most popular of the Louis modes, is here shown developed in an artistic combination of sapphire-blue Bengaline, brocaded armure silk and white cloth, with Kursheedt's Standard gimp for garniture. It is superbly adjusted by the usual number of darts and seams, extends well over the hips to the fashionable three-quarter depth, and presents a series of long, slender tabs or battlements at the back and sides. The fronts open widely over a vest of brocaded armure silk, which extends to a little below the waist-line and shapes a well defined point at the lower edge, the closing being made invisibly at the center. Revers that taper becomingly toward the waist-line and widen gradually below are rolled softly back from the edges of the fronts, and their outer edges are trimmed with crochet gimp. The leg-o'-mutton sleeves rise with picturesque effect at the top, and their close adjustment below is emphasized by deep cuff-facings of the brocaded fabric that reach to the elbow. At the neck is a moderately high Medici collar made of white cloth and decorated along its upper edge with crochet gimp. The picturesque mode is especially becoming to tall, slender
