

0508 2061
able to follow a great deal of the discourse in the action of the clergy and distinctly. Last Sunday morning I went with the other fellows here to the church of St. Francis, right in the Place by us to hear a Swiss Protestant service, but the preacher spoke so indistinctly and in such a monotonous tone that I could not follow a word he said. In the afternoon of that Sunday we had a most pleasant excursion to the end of the lake to Montreux. I wish you had been with me for we visited the castle of Chillon - or rather we walked to it and saw the outside of it, as you had left too soon to permit of an inside view. Chillon is between Montreux and La Ville neuve (where Byron resided - though

W. L. Mackenzie King Papers

Volume 2