ROMANTIC STORY OF POLICE OFFICERS IN "GREAT WHITE SILENCE" OF THE NORTH

During the last quarter century it has taken a mighty effort on the part of Canada to extend law and order to the extreme end of the land whither men flock in search of the yellow metal of furs or of fish.

So long as the hinterland was in the hands of the aborigines there was no need for the intervention of police officers; it was only when the white men, with all their civilized "ways" brought firewater and bad habits to the knowledge of the redmen and Eskimos that it was then found necessary to organize the North-West Mounted Police.

INDIANS NEEDED PROTECTION.
Again, it was ascertained that the Indians through the Mackenzie River to its mouth needed protection and restraint, and now all that great northern land is patrolled.

RETURNED FROM THE NORTH.
A few weeks ago there returned from this northern country the detachment of mounted police who for the past three years have been engaged in exploring the territory between the great Mackenzie River and the Arctic Ocean.

The detachment left Edmonton for their post of duty early in May, 1905. They drove to Fort Saskatchewan, twenty-five miles distant, and from there took an express train to the point of Athabasca Landing, the point of connection with the north.
