Popular Approval of Theft.

The idea of private property has never been fully accepted by the masses of the people, and never had their cordial approval as an institution. The most popular songs and ballads of our nation in all ages, it may be noted, have been those which described sympathetically attacks on private property, from the Robin Hood cycle to the broadsheets in which Turpin and Sheppard were made heroes.

Even nowadays the literature that really touches the people, the literature that the educated classes seldom so much as see exposed for sale, the literature that is sold in the small "general" shop in the back street, and costs fewer pennies than the novel we know costs shillings, still very largely deals with the romantic exploits of the robber. ## At the ... Complaint Desk. .... By KATE AUSTIN.

Copyright, 1907, by C. H. Sutcliffe.

For the third time Marian Macres ose from the uncomfortable settee tha faced the complaint desk and approached the young woman, seated behind the wide window, who was talking to the ehecker. "Of course it gave her a good chance to let us all know what nice white arms she has, but my mother 'd see me in my grave before she'd let me go to a ball in any such costume as that." "Will you kindly ascertain whether they have found my parcel yet?" interrapted Marian, tapping the desk light ly with the tips of her gloved fingers.

The young person flung her an impatient look. "What parcel?" "The one about which I inquired at intervals for the past half hour."

"What's your name and what's wrong with the bundle?" inquired the girl in "You took my name twice and telephoned the delivery department, and I am waiting for their report. Why do you not call them again and see whether the parcel has been located?"

"Say, do you think I want to get the delivery boys down on me? If they find it, they'll tell me quick enough"-

- echoed Marian, her delicate "If" face flushing under the girl's cool im ertinence.
"Well, I'll take your name and ad dress and drop you a postal when we "Indeed, you will not. I want it now," said Marian, and she walked away from the window, with head high and nostrils quivering. "Wonder if she's going down into the subcellar to get it," giggled the young person to the checker. "It is funny how some swells think they can come in here and run this store. I guess she loesn't know we've got a system here."

Then while the girl continued her account of the fancy dress ball Marian crossed to the main aisle, found a floor-walker and asked to be directed to the superintendent of employees. Five minutes later she was ushered into the Five presence of a smooth faced, square shouldered chap who looked as if he had received his training on the foothall gridiron rather than as stock boy in a big department store.

Richard Burnside had risen from the lowest ranks in the store where he was now superintendent, studying practical business methods by day and physical culture and English branches at the Y. M. C. A. rooms by night.

Now he stood beside his desk, Marian Macrea's card bent between his fingers. He looked the slender, grace man accustomed to seeking goo rial for his staff and decided that she must be a reporter or magazine writer hunting information about the condition of the working girl. He had met many such since he had become super-

"What can we do for you, Miss Macrae?" he inquired, offering her a seat "I merely called to ask you whether your complaint department had been organized for the convenience of your customers or to browbeat them so ef-fectually that they will endure almost rather than make Richard Burnside sat down rather uddenly. This was not just what he had expected.

Very deliberately, but convincingly, Marian told her story, from the indif ference of the clerk who had first waited on her to the impertinence of the young woman at the complaint desk. When she had finished, Burnside leaned forward, his hands clasped between his knees, his face boyish no longer, but seamed deeply with lines

"Miss Macrea, you have been treated outrageously, and so have many of our customers, and I, the superinetndent of this store, cannot find a remedy, because I cannot handle women emcause I cannot handle women em-ployees. I can handle the boys in this line, because I know boys, but the in-different, the insolent woman employee s beyond me."

He glanced up to meet Marian's sympathetic glance. Impulsively he told her of his humble beginning, the pride with which he had accepted his new work and his many vexations and trials with incompetent help.

"I have had five girls at that complaint desk, each less satisfactory than the one before her. If I could just find a girl with judgment, discretion and good manners—but you can't expect to find such a girl for $12 a week, can you?" big gray eyes were lifted to Marian's brown ones.

She laughed, a queer, chuckling liftle laugh that seemed to fairly bubble up from her slender white throat.

"Do you think I would fill the bill? I would like to earn $12 a week."
"You?" gasped Burnside, his giance traveling from her neat boots to her trim tailored hat.
"Why, yes. When I came in here I never thought of such a thing, though I have been wanting a confilm.

I have been wanting a position of some sort. I believe I would know whether a woman had a just com-plaint or was trying to cheat the firm, and I have always been complimented on my tact. I know I have patience, because I have been-companion to an invalid for several years. If you would consider the proposition, I can furnish references.' "I don't give a fig for references.

You're engaged. Can you begin Monday? I'll put that girl back where she belongs-in the mail order depart

And that was how Marian Macres walked out of the Barnes Bros.' store with a job in her pocket and an odd little smile playing around her lips. Three months passed. Burnside was no longer worried about the conduct of the complaint department. In fact, he argued that the reason he dropped in to talk complaints over with its pre siding head was merely as a relief after other worries. It was a pleasure to see a department run so smoothly.

And all over the big store the same atmosphere was beginning to assert itself. These were weekly talks to the women clerks, at which reports from floorwalkers and complaining custom-ers were offered; little lectures on the smoothing out of tangles and the adjustment of differences were given. The sales girls took a new view of seiling goods and handling customers, and none knew that these talks were all planned out in a charming little uptown apartment, where the superintendent and the head of the complain department gravely discussed store problems while the invalid mother for got her own pains in listening to the new interests of her daughter.

Then came the great day when James Barnes, Sr., returned from his trip around the world. Richard Burnside had no need to give account of his stewardship. Others had done so in letters that encircled the globe, and so one bright spring morning the head of the house sat in his superintendent's office saying the sort of things that warm an employee's heart when the came a tap at the door, and a girl with soft brown hair and eyes entered the office, her hands filled with report slips.

"Mr. Barnes, I want you to know Miss Macrea, the very capable"— But Mr. Barnes, quite apoplectic, was sparring for wind.

"Marian, what in the world! If you wanted something to do, why didn't you go in for settlement work?"

Richard Burnside felt the little office spinning around as Merian crossed the room and patted the apoplectic forehead soothingly with her slender white

"Dear Uncle Jimmy, do not have a With the head of the firm stroke. trotting and everything mother and I had in the world in this store, I felt I had a right to come in here and see that our small investment was safe. You couldn't expect Jimmy or Howard to do it when one has a new motor and the other a new yacht."

Ten minutes later Marian laid her reports on Burnside's desk and turned to leave. He held the door open for her, and as she flung him a cheery smile she stopped suddenly. His face looked old. His eyes were heavy, as if they had watched something very lovely and dear pass out of his life. She paused irresolutely and glanced over her shoulder. Mr. Barnes, Sr., was just passing through the opposite doorinto the mail order department.

"You will be up tonight, as usual? I want to talk over the question of new rest room for the girls."

Richard Burnside's face went hade paler, and he spoke in a voice shade pater, and he spoke in a vote he had never used to her before.

"Certainly, if you wish it."

"Of course I wish it." She tried to speak gayly, but her voice trembled.
"Don't you understand? I want everything to go on just as it has before.

Do why do you make it so hard for Oh, why do you make it so hard fo me ?? His face was still stern, but she persisted. "I—I want you to tell me what what I would not let you say the other night—because now I know it was all for myself—don't you understand?"

She passed out like a flash and drew the door shut behind her. Richard Burnside leaned heavily against it, breathing hard, but the light of youth had come back to his eyes.

They Called Him Vanus It is curious how inconsistent are the prejudices of people in regard to the use of heathen names. Mr. Payn, in his "Gleams of Memory," tells an amusing story of Dean Burgon, who objected to the name of the goddess of beauty, but found no fault with that of the god of the woods.

An infant was brought to the church for christening, and the name propose for it was Vanus. "Vanus?" rep the dean. "I suppose you mean Venus. Do you imagine I am going to call a Christian child by that and least of all a male child?"

The father of the infant urged that he only wished to name it after his grandfather. "Your grandfather?" cried the dean. "I don't believe it. Where is your grandfather?" He was produced—a poor old soul of eighty or so, bent double and certainly not looking in the least like the goddess in question. "Do you mean to tell me, sir that any clergyman ever christened you 'Vanus,' as you call it?'

"Well, no, sir. I was christened Sylvanus, but they always calls me 'Va-nor is likely to."

"No, your honor," said the Irishwoman, "but it will be a sad thing if it does, for you will have nothing to rest your spectacles upon."

Husband-What do you think, dear? I've had my salary raised $10 a month! His Wife-Oh, isn't that nice! Now we can have that second girl, a tele phone and a piano, and I can take lessons in china painting, can't I?
