The principle of combining the assessment plan with a Safety Fund is rapidly superseding all other systems, and is being endorsed by the leading authorities on life insurance, and the protection of life insurance is offered on a plan as fair and just as a contract for fire insurance, while large accumulations in the hands of the Company are rendered unnecessary and a member never has at risk more than the actual cost of one assessment.

The interest from the Safety Fund is applied to the reduction of dues and assessments while the Fund itself guarantees a long term endowment to persisting members with out extra cost, and affords full protection to the last man. Expenses of Management limited.

Selected Literature.

Nothing is our own: we hold our pleasures just a little, ere they fled;
One by one life robs us of our treasures;
Nothing is our own except our dead.

They are ours, and held in faithful keeping: Safe for ever, all they took away,
Cruel time can never steal that sleeping,
Cruel time can never seize that prey.

Justice pales; truth fades; stars fall from heaven;
The crown of glory great who were; No true crown of honor can be given
Till the wreath lies on a funeral bier.

How the children leave us; and no traces Longer of that smiling angel band;
Gone, for ever gone; and in their places Weary men and anxious women stand.

Yet we have some little ones, still ours; We have the baby smile, we know;
Which we kissed one day and hid with flowers,
On their dead white faces long ago.

When our joy is lost—and life will take it—
When our peace is gone, and pain is left;
Save with some strange, cruel stings that make it
Bitterness beyond all present pains.

Death, more tender-hearted; leaves to sorrow
Still the radiant shadow—fond regret,
We shall find in some far, bright to-morrow,
Joy that he has taken living yet.

Is love ours and do we dream who know it,
Bound with all our heart-strings, all our own?
Any cold and cruel dawn may show it
Shattered, desecrated, overthrown.

Only the dead hearts forsake us never;
Love, that to death's loyal car has fled,
Is thus consecrated ours for ever,
And no change can rob us of our dead.

So, when fate calls to beseege our city,
Dim our gold or make our flowers fall,
Death, the angel, comes in love and pity,
And to save our treasures, claims them all.

HOME-MADE BREAD.

"She's an old darling," said Grace Craxall. "I've got a beautiful recipe for chocolate cakes, and on Friday evening I am going there, to make up my mind, so that the school-children, when I come back, I can show them how to make cinnamon-apple-tarts, too, and lemon-drops, and coconut tarts."

"Grace, I do believe you have taken a lot of your own time, but I don't think it is disgrace enough for Aunt Deborah—our own mother's sister—to open a little little luncheon shop without our mixing ourselves up in the affair."

"But Aunt Debby must live, you know," said Grace, who was parched, and her eyes were full of tears. "I know, but I don't think it is disgrace enough for Aunt Deborah—our own mother's sister—to open a little little luncheon shop without our mixing ourselves up in the affair."

room, and I heard her speaking about it."
"Do you mean to open a bakery?" said bewitched Aunt Debby.
"Not exactly that," explained Grace, "but I mean to open a bakery, or, at any rate, a place where I can make bread such as you make, and you suppose they would put up with the bread stuff they get at the baker's shops? And you could easily get a reputation on your raisin cakes, and fried crullers, and New England pumpkin-pies. Now, couldn't you?"

"I used to be pretty good at cooking," said Grace. "And if you think I could support myself so—"
"I am sure of it!" cried the cheerful Grace. "And I'll go there with you this very day to look at the place, and will engage it for three months on trial. And I can paint you a sign to put over the door, 'Home-Made Bread by Mrs. Deborah May.' And I'll hem you some curtains and arrange themselves in the low window!"

"Yes," said Grace, "I was going to be a shopkeeper," she added, merrily. "But I can help you in the evenings, you know!"

Grace Craxall's prophecies proved correct. Aunt Debby's delicious home-made bread, whiter than powdered lilies, sweet as ambrosia, soon acquired a reputation, and the old lady, who had been a housewife, became a public figure. People came from a dozen blocks to buy the yellow pumpkin-pies and delicious apple-tarts; children brought their hoarded pennies to invest in chocolate sweetmeats, vanilla caramels and cream cakes with puff shells and delicious centres of sweetness. The little money drawer grew heavy with coins, and Aunt Debby's dim eyes grew bright and hopeful again.

And one day Mr. Herbert Valance, walking by with Medora May, stopped and looked in at the shop.

"Isn't that your cousin Grace?" said he, "behind that counter?"

Medora turned crimson with vexation.

"My cousin Grace?" she cried. "No, indeed! We are not in trade!"

What possessed her to utter this deliberate falsehood, Medora could not afterward have told. Partly the sting of falsehood, partly the indignation for Mr. Herbert Valance to know that her relations were not, to use her own expression, "ladies and gentlemen."

Mr. Valance looked up at the sign over the door.

"The name is May," he said, indifferently.

And Medora, angry at herself for blushing so deeply, "but we are no relation."

Mr. Valance thought over the matter afterward; he had met Miss May at an evening party given by a friend where pretty Grace Craxall was also present—he had taken rather a fancy to the bright blue eyes and delicate coloring of the former.

Medora May. "One would think it was disgrace enough for Aunt Deborah—our own mother's sister—to open a little little luncheon shop without our mixing ourselves up in the affair."
