WOMEN'S VOTES

Mrs. Pankhurst Lectures in a Rochester Theatre.

She Speaks on the Struggles of the Suffragettes.

Rochesterians have seen a suffragette, nay, the chief suffragette, Mrs. Emme-Pankhurst, first Amazon of then all. She is a slight, graceful woman and looks more as though she could play "Alice Sit by the Fire" than beard a premier in his lair. But, when she talks and becomes wrapt up in her subject then the dynamic nerve force which has made gentlewomen a terror to Downing street asserts itself. It was a curious, inquiring audience which listened to the Englishwoman at Baker Theatre last night. They wanted to know what the suffragette movement might mean, what it had attained, and whether its methods were as black as the newspapers had painted them. These questions Mrs. Pankhurst deal with in a quiet, logical manner that compelled attention.

The rison garb, were meted out to working girl and titled lady alike. Then the women fought the government and again the authorities had to free prisoners, lest they should die in jail. Foreible feeding was the governmental reply—a practice condemned as dangerous by the highest medical authirity in the land.

Why, in the first place, did the up-holders of the woman's suffrage cause holders of the woman's suffrage cause desert their old ways. Mrs. Pankhurst said it was because, at the end of fifty years, after being made fair promises by Liberals. Conservatives, Laborites. Socialists and the rest, they found that their cause was not "practical politics." The press had boycotted them: wo-way's suffrage did not interest its read-The press had boycotted them: woman's suffrage did not interest its readers: statesmen listened to them with bored indulgence and reserved their serious attention for people who had votes. The women recognized that they must break up this indifference. So, four years ago at the beginning of the election campaign, they told the party leaders that, if they could not do the "clean work of polities,"—exercise the franchise, that is to say, they would not do the "dirty work" of polities; they would not go and canvass for votes for men, bring voters to the poll on election days, and so forth. More than that, they began to "heekle" Cabinet Ministers in public meetings. It is a time honored custom in England for electors to ask questions of the speakers in political meetings. But what did the women find when they attempted to do it? Their questions were not answered and the questioners were roughly hustled into the street. That was because their questions had become unpleasantly specific. They no longer had a several the speakers on in favor of woman. asked, "Are you in favor of woman suffrage?" That lent itself to complacent platitude. They asked instead,
"When will you give women the vote?"
That was more difficult to answer and the politicians found it convenient to dodge the issue. But women persevered.
In spite of rough treatment, they reiterated their questions. Then it was decided to admit no woman to political

Women may pay taxes; they may keep the family if the husband or father is sick or incapable; but they may not vote. One remedy alone they knew under the law—the right to peti-tion. the government must come to terms.
"Do all the women in England want to vote?" called out a voice. "Do all the women in England want to vote?" called out a voice.

"An intelligent minority is enough to vouch for the necessity for any was a sure." answered Mrs. Pankhurst. It was only a minority of Abolitionists who secured the vote for the negro. The English agricultural laborer was given the vote, though he was too ignorant to ask for it. The fact that he did not know he needed it showed how dire that need was. The percentage of women in favor of woman suffrage is as large a proportion as has carried any great reform in time past. No acid was thrown at Bermondey, Mrs. Pankhurst asserted. Some harm-less chemical was poured into a ballot box with the intention of destroying the votes. "I don't approve of that," said Mrs. Pankhurst, "but discretion cannot always be looked for when people are passionately wrought up over a political issue. A labor man asked why the women did not affiliate with the socialists. "We will not associate with any party until we can do so as voters," said Mrs. Pankhurst. "Then each of us will go her own way, as men do."

Never was the outlook so bright for woman suffrage in Great Britain as it is now, she concluded. More has been done to further the cause in four short years than in the whole half century preceding.

Gilbert, of No. 108 Brinkman street, and Brakeman Henry H. Schuldt, of No. 1921 Bailey avenue, were both terribly injured. Schult is not expected to recover.

Conductor William H. Splaine, of No. 16 Goembel street, with engine No. 2499, made up his freight of twenty empty cars at North Tonawanda and started for Buffalo shortly before 7 o'clock last night. Without a second's warning, as the train was speeding by the Excelsior Steel Ball Works, the boiler of the engine let go. Fireman Rhode, who was coaling his engine at the time of the explosion, was driven with terrible force into the coal heap of the engine tender. The engine cab was blown to kindling and ten cars of the train were piled in a heap, covering both the north and southbound tracks. Engineer Gilbert was carried with the boiler into the west ditch, while Brakeman Schuldt, who was riding in the fireman's cab, was thrown across the northbound track and a ditch, against a telegraph pole.

The engine boiler in the explosion turned completely around and landed in the ditch to the west of the southbound track. The wheels of the engine were distributed in all directions, hundreds of feet apart. The sudden stopping of the engine piled ten of
