The Fish Market in Nova Scotia.

(From The Maritime Merchant.) DRIED FISH.

It is now impossible to fairly well estimate the available supplies of dry fish. The total catches are fully up to the average of pre-war figures. This includes all fish producing countries, with the exception of Norway, where the catch was somewhat under the average. The Lunenburg catch has been the largest in the history of the trade, totalling 300,000 quintals-about 35,000 quintals over 1921. The Nova Scotia Shore catch, as dried for export, has been very disappointingprobably the smallest on record. This catch, however, in recent years is a small factor, as the bulk of the Codfish caught on our shores for some ten years has been pickle-cured and sold in a green state to the United

There has been much confusion in connection with the prices paid for dry fish. The Lunenburg heavy salted Bank Codfish, usually considered inferior to Newfoundland cure, have up to the present sold at prices ruling $1.50 per qtl. above St. John's, Nfid., prices on shore cure, and owing to the fact that there has been a good demand in markets requiring the heavy salted article, and also owing to bad weather conditions preventing any large supplies being put on the market at one time, exporters have been able to market practically all of the 120,000 quintals, representing the catch of the Lunenburg fleet, with a fair margin of profit. There is now left in exporters' hands about 20,000 quintals of the catches just referred to, and in the hands of the Lunenburg fish makers the entire summer catch of about 180,-000 quintals. In the face of lower prices in Newfoundland, and the fact that conditions in . the consuming countries of Europe and South America have gone from bad to worse, it would appear that the price of Lunenburg cure would have to materially decline. The market opened at $8.00 delivered Lunenburg and last reported sales were at $7.65, whereas Newfoundland bank fish is now being offered delivered Halifax at $6.50 per qtl. It is thought that the price of Lunenburg cure will have to come down to this figure, if not to $6.00

The-Gaspe Coast catch of codfish will be a good average, estimated at 100,000 quintals, a considerable proportion of which has been marketed in Naples with a good profit. The price to the fishermen on the Gaspe Coast for good quality has been $7.00 per qtl., or 50c. to $1.00 per qtl. over Newfoundland prices. The buying price on the Gaspe Coast has recently been reduced $1.00 per qtl.

Newfoundland has had a good average catch but the quality is much under the average owing mostly to bad weather conditions. Owing to adverse exchange and the poverty of the people in the consuming markets of Eur. ope and South America, the or look for Newfoundland's dried fish is decidedly discouraging. Greece, which usually takes 100,0% to 150,000 qtls., is not likely to take anything. In Portugal conditions are extremely adverse. There is a big demand for Codfsh, but the ruinous rate of exchange makes the business almost impossible. As a result many Oporto cargoes are being offered on the Halifax market. The very low exchange in Brazil prevents any profitable business in that country. In view of the bad outlook, prices in Newfoundland have recently fallen 50c per gtl., or from $6.00 and $6.50 to $5.50 and $6.00 paid to the fishermen in the outports, with the same reduction in St. John's, Nfld. It is considered that Nova Scotia exporters are in a better position than Newfoundland, as it is thought that there will be a continued good demand in the West India markets for Lunenburg cure, as well as for large and medium Shore quality. It must be admitted that the rather encouraging outlook of last spring for a normal dry fish export trade, has quite disappeared. Very little improvement can be looked for until the extremely adverse exchanges in Portugal, Italy, Spain and South America considerably improve.

PICKLED FISH.

Never in the history of the trade has there been such a stagnation in the marketing of pickled fish as during this season. Notwithstanding extremely low prices, the West India demand is very limited. Herring are selling below the cost of production, The West Indies are being supplied with Newfoundland cure. Owing to the low value very few Herring are being packed in N.S. Prices are also low in Spring Mackerel. It would appear that consumers are giving up the use of pickled fish. This notwithstanding an improvement in packages the new U.S. tariff imposed 14c. per lb. on dry and pickled fish not in barrels, and $3.00 per bbl. on Mackerel, Herring, etc. It is considered that the ally all of this with the exception of the duty on pickle-cured Codfish as used for the boneless fish trade, which must result in part, at least, of the duty being paid by the producer.
