FIGHTING FOR A NAME.

The man saw that it would be useless to resist, particularly as Mr. Huntling, having secured his own prisoner below, now made his appearance on deck, with the evident intention of assisting Ned if necessary.

With a sullen and dejected air, therefore, he turned about and walked quietly down the stairs to the cabin, where he was met by Mr. Huntling, who, when he entered, while Mr. Huntling closed and locked the door after him.

The moment this was achieved, the two men sprang swiftly and noiselessly toward the smoking-room, where they made short work of overcoming and binding the second mate, who, having taken a glass too much, was almost on the verge of a drunken stupor.

When this was accomplished, Ned's hands fell weakly by his side, and for a moment it seemed as if all his strength would desert.

"We are saved," he said, with a long drawn breath of relief.

"Yes, I hope so, but come above, where the air will revive you, for we have yet much to do, and no time to lose," returned his companion, who was scarcely less uneasy.

"They locked a door of the smoking-room, then once more hastened on deck, where they again regained their composure and strength as the cool, refreshing salt air blew over them.

"We must fasten down the companion-way hatch," Mr. Huntling said, "and then we need have no fear of any of the men below, even though they should succeed in getting out of their rooms, and together they closed and secured it.

"Now, you will remain here to guard everything, while I take a boat and go ashore to report what we have done to some officer, and telegraph to Boston," remarked Ned, referring to the plan which they had previously discussed.

"Yes, but in case the other men should return," Mr. Huntling began in a doubtful tone, for now that he was about to be left alone in such a responsible position, he feared, for the first time, the difficulties which he might not be able to cope single-handed.

"They will not—they are sure to remain away until long after midnight, and before then time I will be back with the officers," Mr. Huntling said, with a confidence which he did not feel.

"Mr. Huntling, that is very good of you, but I have no intention of leaving you alone in this boat," Ned replied, "I have no intention of leaving you alone in this boat."

"That was quickly done, and Ned, hastily descending the steps which had been left down for the return of the absent sailors, sprang upon a chair and, with a vigorous stroke, began to pull vigorously towards the shore, while Mr. Huntling went back to his lonely vigil on deck.

An hour later Ned entered the headquarters of the police in Halifax, and asked to see the chief, privately, on an important business.

His request was granted, and he was immediately conducted to the private office of that dignitary.

"Mr. Officer," Ned began in his frank, straightforward way, "you will doubtless be greatly surprised by the communication which I am about to make to you, and to come to the point at once, you have probably heard of a recent robbery of the Third National Bank in Boston."

The man merely nodded, but his keen eyes instantly began to follow Ned, as he saw the man's face, and he had been blazoned throughout the land in connection with it."

"Zounds!" interrupted the amazed official, "how could the man who took his stand by the door, as if he feared that Ned would vanish by magic through it, while he regarded the young man with undisguised astonishment, for he, with hosts of others, had firmly believed that Edward Heatherton had robbed the Boston bank."

Ned smiled with some amusement.

"Pray, do not fear, sir," he quietly resumed, "I have no intention of leaving the room until I have told you my story. I am not thief, although you may have good reason for believing me to be one. Please sit down, as I have quite a long tale to relate and I must be as brief as possible."

"He took a chair and placed it against the door, to prove his assertion that he had no desire to leave the place, then dropping upon a chair opposite the man, he related all that had occurred to him since leaving the bank on that memorable Saturday, nearly two weeks previous.

The chief listened attentively throughout the recital, never once removing his sharp eyes from Ned's face, never once interrupting him.

"When the young man concluded, however, he observed with evident satisfaction:

"Well, well, youngster, if what you tell me is true, you have put a fine job into my hands, as well as made a pretty penny on your own account; for there is a big reward offered for the recovery of the stolen property."

"I don't care anything about the reward, if I can but regain the confidence of my employers and clear my name, before the world, of the stain, which now rests upon it," Ned said, with great earnestness, "and I will be continued, half a million dollars with me, I will convince you of the truth of what I have told you, I trust, too, and that you will be as expeditious in your arrangements as possible, for my companion is alone on the Bald Eagle, and if the other sailors should return, they would probably be empowered, the captain and crew liberated, and all would escape with the boat."

"A right," he said, "you are on board the Bald Eagle inside of an hour," the chief remarked in a business-like tone, as he arose and touched an electric button

"It feels so uncomfortable. Food distresses me. I get blue and despondent. My doctor says it's my stomach. And what did your doctor tell you to take? Ayer's Sarsaparilla."

SMITH AND WILTSE ARE AT THE TOP OF THE PITCHERS.

Lead the Pitchers in the Big Leagues, But They Are Not the Premier Twirlers.

According to the percentages, which include games played up to July 15, Smith, of the Chicago White Sox, and Wiltse, of the New York Nationals, are the leading pitchers in their respective leagues for the first half of the season.

The premier pitchers of both leagues are to be found farther down the lists, however, as one glance at the records shows that the best of the game is being played by the premier twirlers.

Mr. F. G. Harding, a retired farmer, living at Nilestone, Middlesex county, Ont., writes as follows:

"I have been troubled with bleeding and itching piles for four or five years, and have suffered almost everything, but could get nothing that would give relief. On hearing of Dr. Chase's Ointment, I procured it, and after using it for a few days, I found it to completely cure me. I am recommending it to all afflicted as I was."

DR. SWARTOUT DROWNED. Presbyterian Missionary Loses Life in British Columbia.

Toronto, July 18.—Rev. Dr. MacKay today received a telegram announcing that Rev. Matthew Swartout, Presbyterian missionary, has been drowned by the capsizing of his boat on the British Columbia coast.

But that the accident was not discovered until Sunday, when a party of his boat came ashore. "The death of Mr. Swartout," said Dr. MacKay, "is a severe blow to our Indian work on the Pacific Coast. He was once described to me as the most apostolic man on the west coast. He was good in character. He fought valiantly against the spread of the liquor habit, and he was largely as a result of his efforts the traffic was practically suppressed. Before leaving Toronto, 12 years ago, he was an elder of the Presbyterian church, and superintendent of the Dunt Avenue Presbyterian Church."

He answered Dr. Robertson's call to workers for the plains, and after two years there, went to the coast. Mr. Swartout leaves a widow and two daughters.

Couldn't Kill Him. Somerville, N. J., July 19.—As Oscar Dow was driving a team of horses attached to a hay wagon across the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad near Skillman Station this afternoon, the wagon was struck by a westbound Blue Line flyer running 60 miles an hour.

Dow was hurled in the air 20 feet above the smokestack of the locomotive. When the train had passed they saw him standing in a field about forty feet from the tracks.

Dow sustained only a slight injury to his shoulder, and was taken to his home in the automobile. His wagon was wrecked and his horses were badly injured.

A New "Thought School." Kalamazoo, July 19.—Mrs. May Cecil Lincoln, of Buffalo, N. Y., has bought 52 acres at Gull Lake, where she is putting up a school and sanitarium, which will be devoted to the furthering of the occult sciences. It will be called "Temple Tower" and will cost half a million dollars.

Such methods as color and sound vibrations, osteopathy and electricity will be employed. In the school the Oriental philosophies will be taught.

Mrs. Lincoln says: "Palms and all the occult and Christian Sciences will find a home in our school."

WHY HIGHBALL WAS DESTROYED

After His Grand Race, Scheffel Could Not Ask Him to Continue His Suffering.

New York, July 18.—The breaking-down of Highball and the necessity for shooting the American Derby winner caused sincere grief among horsemen. He was a grand horse, in the opinion of many the best 3-year-old in America. The gatekeeper of the horse was shown in an incident which occurred after his leg was broken.

While waiting for the wagon to come to remove him the fifth race was run. His handlers were holding Highball, with his face headed up the stretch, and he was standing by the last quarter pole, just inside the inner rail. As the horses came dashing down the stretch, toward him, Highball whistled like a flash, and, with one leg broken, attempted to make for the finish line. Of course, his handlers held him in check before he had taken two bounds, but his action showed his gameness to the very end. It has been said the leg might have been patched up and the horse sent to the Dominion, but Scheffel, his owner, said:
