London, March 10 .- When you have walked some distance into quickwand and are sinking deeper and deeper with every step you take, it is always difficult to decide whether you are more likely to reach firm ground by pressing forward or by going backward. You must do one or the other. You cannot just stand fast, for that is inevitable destruction.

The French government clearly are of the opinion that safety lies in marching further into the quagmire. So three more German cities have been occupied, more burgomasters and officials expelled, more men and boys shot in the streets, more black troops imported, more regulations and more decrees issued; there are more depressions of French, Belgian and Italian exchanges, more confusion in everybody's business, in Central Europe-in a sentence, everywhere there is more quaking and less solid

The result is that 3,000,000 tons in coal and in coke. The total shortage as compared with wholesome mixture of hatred, greed the promises of Spa was only eight per cent. France has actually received and military arrogance. The French 50,000 tons during the whole of this period. A swarm of engineers, government are not committed by railwaymen, bargemen, officials of all kinds and hotel waiters, supported by a formidable army of nearly 150,000 men, have in six weeks produced this ridiculous output. No doubt the amount will later on be increased by further pressure and by pouring in more railwaymen, but it will be a long time before France receives her Spa quota, minus eight per cent, and then there will be some months' arrears to make up.

No wonder that M. Loucheur stated flatly in the French Chamber that he did not approve of the Ruhr en-Merprise. He has one distinct adwantage over the Ruhr plungers-he does know something about business He can boast also of another gift, possession of which is not without significance when you consider his present attitude. He is an admirable judge of tonforrow's weather. That is a rare endowment amongst politicians. Any simpleton can tell you which way the wind is blowing tomay, but it requires a man of special Mosight and experience in these mat-Hers to forecast the direction of the

M. Loucheur is one of those exceptionally well equipped weather prophets. So he satisfies the opinion of today by giving his support to M. Poincare, and he safeguards his posifion against the morrow's change by stating clearly that he does not approve the policy he supports.

I have read no declaration from any French statesman of eminence—with the doubtful exception of M. Barthou -indicating belief in the wisdom of the venture. And yet French courage, French pride, French loyalty, French patriotism - and maybe
