and New York bankers for placing a portion of the Canadian loan in this market were reported under way to-day to meet requirements, $200,000,-000 for maturing Victory bonds and treasury bills. It was indicated that Canada would follow the advice of New York bankers by floating a long-term internal loan of $100,000,000 and selling an equal amount of short-term securities on this market. Spirited financing was said to have developed between two banking groups, one headed by J. P. Mergan & Company and the other by the Chase Securities Corporation. The Morgan firm was understood to have advised the Dominion representative on the general set-up of the loan, recommending certain provisions to insure the stability of the exchange. The $100,000,000 Canadian loan sold here in 1922 was underwritten by a banking syndicate headed by J. P. Morgan & Co.
