An Old Business Man. There are two well-known lines in an H. BUTTERWORTH, equally well known play, which run in

"At seventeen years many their fortunesseek, But at four score it is too late a week."
While Mr. Robert Hay, the well-known While Mr. Robert Hay, the well-known furniture manufacturer of this city does not now need to seek a fortune, there are many persons who, not familiar with his remarkable energy and pluck, will say that it is too late a week for him to endure the cares of a business life, especially after an active and successful career of 51 years. But he has a purpose in view, which is to build up his trade to what it was in the old Jacques & Hay days; when every build up his trade to what it was in the old Jacques & Hay days: when every machine in his big factory was running, and 400 men were busily employed. Although he has been twice through the 'fiery furnace,' at $100,000 each trip, there is a light in his eye and a ring in his voice which belied his almost $0 years. Mr. Hay's son, John, replaces Messrs. Craig & Rogers who have retired from the firm; but the style remains as heretofore, R. Hay & Co. Such extensive premises as theirs, if run at their full capacity require an enormous trade, for they can turn out and sworth of furniture. We shall be glad to see the firm, by export or otherwise, find satisfactory sale for its large output. It is, however, not to be denied that competition is now keen in this line and profits greatly cut down.

A Boom in Picture Framing. R. J.
