Leaving his cool retreat, which nestles among tall pines in a picture que valley, Stickler started on a tramp soon after daybreak in company with a Scotch terrier dog and a double-barrelled gun. Making his way through tangled underbrush and dense thickets Mr. Stickler struck a path leading to the Hotel Kaaterskill, where he stopped a short time and chatted with a couple of Philadelphia friend, who indulged in numberless good-natured jests rein numberless good-natured jests re-garding the hunting proclivities of Stickler. Mr. Stickler has always prided hinself on his intimate knowledge and close acquaintance with every inch of Rip Van Winkle's old hills, but for once he lost his way and wandered into an unknown country. His little dog, which had kept close at its master's heels, ran several yards ahead and began to bark and forth. Advancing and run back and forth. Advancing cautiously, and looking through the bushes, Mr. Stickler saw two cub bears playing in an open space near four tall trees. Their antics for a moment amused Stickler, but the dog's continued barking frightened the young bruins, and the larger of the two ran toward the hunter's hiding place. Stickler fired hurriedly without taking cateful aim and the little animal set up a cry that could be heard for miles and miles.

Are country employments odious in themselves? It is appalling to note the young lives wrecked in cities; youths who strain every nerve and use every means to at tain a profession, who just reach the threshold and then succomb, worn out in mind and crushed in body. Facts About Pigeons. POWER OF FLIGHT,-THREE THOUSAN

Audubon tells that pigeons' power of flight enables them, when in need, to survey and pass over an astonishing extent of country in a very short time. Pigeons, for example, have been killed in the neighborhood of New York with their crops filled with rice, collected by them in the fields at Georgia and Caroline, the nearest point at which this supply could possibly have been obtained. And that it is well known that, owing to their great power of the thoroughfare it fastened sayagely upon the parcel of well-digestion, they will decompose food entirely in twelve hours, they must have traveled between three hundred and four hundred miles in six hours, making their speed at an average of about a mile a minute.
