

It is not often that a marriage notice is to be found among the Moulton College news items, but this month we have the pleasure of announcing to those of our readers not already aware of the event, the wedding of one of our recent students. On the evening of March 28th, Miss Elizabeth A. Tyers was married to Mr. George B. Mercer, the ceremony being performed at the bride's home, by Rev. O. C. S. Wallace. We all join in wishing her much joy; if we can judge from her earnest, faithful work among us, and her unfailing good-nature, Mr. Mercer will long bless the day when a Moulton girl united her fortunes to his.

Most of the Moulton girls had the pleasure of a visit home or to friends in the city during the very short Easter holidays. A few remained behind, and these all agree that the College was by no means an unpleasant place in which to spend the recess. The conspicuous absence of the early-rising bell, study-hour, and night-bells formed a considerable element in our happy content. We were prompt in returning to our places this time, and the cheerful faces that were seen at the reception on Monday evening, told of clear consciences as well as of pleasant holidays.

THE last Heliconian meeting presented some new features. A short paper on Jean Ingelow was read by Miss Bush, and the programme consisted largely of selections from the works of that writer. The "Songs of Seven" were beautifully rendered and heartily enjoyed. In this part of the entertainment we had the very efficient help of some of the youngest members of the school as well as of older and more advanced students. Miss Scarfe recited "The High Tide on the Coast of Lincolnshire," with her usual pleasing effect. The musical selections were appropriate and well-rendered, and Miss Stanley's essay on "Sounds" gave pleasure to us all.

WOODSTOCK COLLEGE.

EVERY afternoon from four o'clock to six, the Campus presents a lively appearance. Football is now in full swing. The players are evidently in practice to win.

STUDENT life has many changes. Last week we said goodbye to three of the "Boys," F. Lowe, C. Collishaw, and R. Harper. We shall miss the sage Colli, the genial Frank, and there is no possible successor to Pat.

THE societies here have thought it wise to adjourn for the remainder of the season. Their work generally has been of a high order throughout the year, and those who attended the weekly meetings with regularity, know that they have gained much from this means of improvement; but the studies of the year are now so crowding upon us, as to make it very difficult to prepare exercises easily.
