Canned Salmon.

The market for future salmon continues exceedingly dull, the various jobbing houses yet showing indifference to the offerings of agents. There are no reports to hand indicating the way the fish are running on the Columbia, but last advices, some two weeks ago, reported low water and the prospects rather unfavorable for any considerable pack during this month. This, however, is not an unusual feature, as the packers seldom expect a run of fish for the opening month of the season. The majority, however, claim to have sold their packs for export, and now speak of the quantity as aggregating closely 200,000 cases. This would leave, taking last year's labor as a basis, about 150,000 cases for disposition in the home markets; but as our dealers appear in no haste to consider the offerings from this quantity, it is rather disappointing to the packers that their brands do not receive the usual consideration. Jobbers view the prices asked as too high in comparison with Alaska, hence they are desirous of awaiting the distribution of their stocks of old, and also later developments regarding the position of new.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.
