PROF. JAMES DENNEY

of the United Free Church College, Glasgow, the author of "The Death of Christ," "Studies in Theology," and other well-known books, has just completed a most important theological work upon which he has long been engaged. In its pages he purposes to show that the Gospel may be justified by appeal to Jesus. Christianity, as the New Testament presents it, is often alleged to be discredited by such an appeal. The historical Jesus, so far as we know Him, does not, it is asserted, supply a real basis for historical Christianity. "What I have written," writes the author, "is not meant to be apologetic in any unscientific sense, but I believe it amounts to a proof, in view of all the legitimate results of historical criticism, that the allegation in question is unsound."
