PRINCESS LOUISE DRAGOON GUARDS

Question No. 220—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. When were the Princess Louise Dragoon Guards first constituted as a regiment?

2. When was the regiment ordered to be reduced to nil strength and disbanded?

3. What in detail were the reasons for such order?

4. What, if any, action has been taken to assure the preservation of the high traditions of the regiment?

5. Will the government give consideration to the return of this regiment to active status?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): 1. The Princess Louise Dragoon Guards originated as the "Ottawa Troop of Cavalry" authorized 23 May 1872 and redesignated "Dragoon Guards" on 15 November 1878 and as "The Princess Louise Dragoon Guards" on 3 January 1879. It became a regiment with the formation of an additional squadron and a regimental headquarters authorized respectively on 1 January 1903 and 1 February 1903. The regiment was redesignated "5th Princess Louise Dragoon Guards" on 1 February 1903; "The Princess Louise Dragoon Guards" on 1 February 1903; "The Princess Louise Dragoon Guards" on 15 March 1920. It was amalgamated with the 4th Hussars of Canada on 15 December 1936 and redesignated "4th Princess Louise Dragoon Guards".

2. The regiment has not been disbanded. It was reduced to nil strength and transferred to the supplementary order of battle effective 31 March 1965.

3. The regiment was transferred to the supplementary order of battle following a review of the recommendations of the ministerial commission on the reorganization of the militia. The commission recommended that the Princess Louise Dragoon Guards be reduced to nil strength as there was no foreseeable requirement for the unit. The departmental review confirmed this recommendation.

4. The Princess Louise Dragoon Guards is at present a unit of the Canadian Army (militia) supplementary order of battle. As such its name and traditions will be preserved in view of the valued contribution which the unit has made in the past and against the possibility that changed circumstances might require its reactivation in the future.
