

CHAPTER IV.

EXPLORATIONS OF LIEUTENANT JOHN RODGERS, U. S. N.

The Exploration of the "Vincennes" a part of the United States Expedition under Commander Ringgold—Appropriation by Congress—Objects—Secretary Kennedy's instructions—Sickness of Commander Ringgold—Lieutenant Rodgers succeeds to the command—Loss of the "Porpoise"—The "Vincennes" leaves Hong Kong for her Arctic cruise—Arrives at Petropaulovski—Condition of the town—Enters Bering Straits—Leaves a party under Lieutenant Brooke at Glassenapp—Habits and customs of the natives—The "Vincennes" in the Arctic Sea—Anchors in latitude 72° 5' North—Sails over the tail of Herald Shoal and locates Herald Island—Can see no trace of Plover Island—Approaches Wrangell Land—Returns to St. Lawrence Bay and Glassenapp for Lieutenant Brooke's party—Arrives at San Francisco, Oct. 13, 1855—Suggestions for the publication of the full narrative . . . . .

108

CHAPTER V.

EXPLORATIONS OF DR. ISAAC I. HAYES, 1860-61.

Design of Dr. Hayes for a new exploration suggested while on his first voyage with Kane—His plans supported by the Smithsonian and other institutions—Sails from Boston with Sonntag, July 7, 1860—Arrives off Prøven on the twenty-fourth day out—Adds to his ship's company and supplies at Upernavik—Crosses Melville Bay in fifty-five hours to Cape York—Winters at Port Foulke—Observatory set up—Observations made—Experiences of the season—Death of Sonntag, Hans' account of it—The Arctic night described—Attempts to launch the boat on the Polar Sea—Highest point reached—Belief in the existence of the open sea confirmed—Experiences of recent navigators compared with this—Explorations and surveys made on the return voyage to the United States—Purpose of a new expedition—Reception of the gold medals from abroad—Volumes published . . . . .

132

CHAPTER VI.

THE GRINNELL AND HAVEN EXPEDITION OF C. F. HALL—THE FIRST OF HIS THREE VOYAGES, 1860-62.

Hall's motives for his first voyage—Arctic study—Limited resources—Reasons for believing that some of Franklin's men still lived—Circular endorsed by leading men of Ohio—Generous aid by Mr. Grinnell and by Williams and Haven—Sails from New London—Buries his native companion, Kud-la-go—Visits Holsteinborg—The kayaks—The belted and the gothic icebergs—Arrives at Cornelius Grinnell Bay—First impressions of the natives—Destruction of the "Rescue" and the expedition boat—First acquaintance with Ebierbing and Too-koo-li-too—Inland excursion—Explorations in the spring following—Discovery that Frobisher "Strait" is a bay—Finding of the Frobisher relics confirmed by Barrow's history—Explorations in the spring and summer of 1862—Notes of Eskimo dress, habits, and superstitions—Return to the United States with the two natives and their child . . . . .

161