Two British airmen had an unusual experience last night in the battle zone. Their planes crashed in German territory ten miles behind the St. Quentin Canal. The men were not injured, and tramped back to their own lines, making their way successfully thru great numbers of German troops and across the Hindenburg line.

way of machine gun barrages. Two hundred and fifty rapid fires were brought up and concentrated. These guns opened a terrific barrage, during which each one of them pumped 25,000 rounds of ammunition into the German defences. The enemy was absolutely overwhelmed. Those upon whom it was swept could neither retreat nor advance, and large numbers surrendered. But the casualties were great. In one small place, for example, three hundred dead lates were found.

In Gauche Wood the Germans had four British tanks which they had previously captured. These tanks were used as machine gun fortresses, and held out for hours before being taken.

Late in the afternoon the Germans opened a heavy attack between Havrincourt and Villers-Guislain with the sixth German division. This assault was directed not only at the British who were engaged in yesterday's operations, but against positions a little further to the morth which the British had taken in the past few days. The attack succeeded in relling the British back somewhat on the left, but this ground was quickly regained in a counter-move, and the Germans were everywhere repulsed with heavy losses.
