GARDEN POTTERY

THE SECRET of the beauty that we admire in old Italian gardens lies, the gardeners tell you, in the nice relation between the architecture and the landscape.

A stone bowl, pot or box of flowers, placed just in the right spot, may give a surprisingly new and beautiful effect to a garden.

A collection of "A-ti-crete" Vases, Flower Pots and Boxes is on view in the basement. The material is of combined marble dust and Portland cement of a stone-like color that harmonizes well with the green of plants and shrubbery.

A pair of Vases, 13 1/2 inches in diameter and 18 inches high. Price, the pair, $28.00.

A pair of Flower Pots with medallion ornaments, 20 inches in diameter and 12 inches high. Price, the pair, $17.00.

A Flower Pot mounted upon a tall pedestal, decorated with oak leaves in relief, 44 inches high. Price, $19.50.

A Flower Box mounted upon a stand, 64 x 12 inches and 34 inches high, gracefully ornamented with groups of Greek figures in high relief. Price, $41.00.

Dainty Flower Pots of smaller size are priced as low as $11.00 a pair.

THE FLEXIBLE RATTAN and reed furniture looks, what it is, a standing invitation to rest in cool, informal comfort. But no one will deny its light, tasteful beauty, a combination of art and usefulness that appeals at once to your sense of repose.

In the Furniture Building is arranged a large grouping of suites and separate pieces of rattan, willow and reed furniture. They are delightful, with bright, summery cretonnes, patterned in bird, foliage and floral designs.

The suite illustrated is of woven prairie grass, in either Baronial brown or verdure green, and consists of an octagonal-shaped table, 36 inches in diameter, at $16.25; arm chair, $16.25; arm rocker, $16.00; settee, $27.50, and floor lamp, $22.00.

The Note Book

About the Queen Anne Tea Service.

Everyone who has traveled through the lanes and hamlets of rural England is familiar with the delightful old houses of plaster and oak beams, surrounded with their many-colored flower gardens. The period of English art that produced these gave us also the beautiful Queen Anne pattern of silverware.

The Queen Anne Tea Service in sterling silver, the same as used for so many years on the tables of many English residences, would add a note of beauty to your own home.

Because of its durability and classic, simple design this Tea Set will remain fresh and beautiful after a great length of service.

This design may be found among other interesting examples of English period silverware.

BRITISH CARRY STRONGHOLDS

absolutely no importance. German aeroplanes dropped bombs rather indiscriminately back of the British lines during the moonlight hours of last night.

Raiders continue all up and down the front. A British raiding party made a large body of Germans in "No Man's Land" and had a hot night, finally routing the Germans, who fled, leaving numbers of dead and prisoners behind.

Recently captured letters written by German soldiers to their friends and family are not at all pleased with any proposals to change fronts. One written by a German officer on the Russian front is particularly interesting. It says:

It is quite untrue that Russians are deserting in great numbers, or that an armistice has been declared. As a matter of fact, the situation has led to more casualties than usual because the Germans are becoming foolhardy. We have lost here, during a short period, a battalion commander, regimental medical officer and company commander, all three lack of caution. The first two were bagged by an infantry sniper, while they were debating with a Russian on peace. Our great topic is the possibility of moving westward. We do not desire a change of front.

SOLDIERS HUSTLE SOCIAL DEMOCRATS

posed meeting, and decided, under the leadership of Sergt.-Major A. E. Lowery, to attend the event to see that proper recognition was given British customs. As they marched to the hall they were joined by other veterans and soldiers until their ranks swelled to several scores. The attendance in the hall was approximately 500 men, women and children, including about 400 soldiers, the majority of them being veterans. Many of the latter wore civilian clothes, but were distinguished by their buttons. The greater number of the civilians represented a foreign element who oppose conscription and promote militarism. Their understanding of English was limited, and many of them in fleeing to the doors at the outbreak of the trouble were bewildered, almost wild with fright and totally at a loss to comprehend the cause.

Police Were Present. Inspector Geddes, wearing civilian clothes, occupied a seat in the rear of the hall and had ten plainclothesmen scattered thru the audience. Uniformed patrolmen from two stations stood outside the hall guarding against a rush on the meeting from without.

CRITICIZE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR. Special to The Toronto World. Toronto, June 3.—At the Methodist conference sitting held on Saturday, Rev. Dr. Graham of Toronto criticized race track gambling, which brought Sean Carter, M.L.A., to his feet with the declaration that the lieutenant-governor had been told his duty on the floor of the house, and if God should spare him (the speaker) he would be told again. H. P. Moore of Aton asked why Toronto University had conferred its highest degree on the man who should see the practice abolished.

that the leaders could hold the meeting and that he would represent the returned men's interests. Vociferous applause greeted this announcement.

Lowery resumed his seat, but as the soldiers continued to cheer he again spoke from the platform, asking for order. The band, an organization of foreigners, began playing the "Marsellaise." The soldiers, thwarted in their demand that the national anthem be played, began singing "God Save the King," and their voices drowned the music. In different parts of the room men refused to doff their hats and sing the national anthem.

Their refusal was the signal for the outbreak of hostilities. Soldiers began hacking up their demand for bareheadedness during the singing of the hymn with their fists. The individuals who were struck, countered the blows and fights ensued. No help was given by his companions to any objector to conscription who was seized by the veterans. An exact account of what took place in the next few minutes could not be given. The tumult increased, the chairs were overturned and broken, women screamed, men fought and children cried.

Broke for the Doors. As the action had been rehearsed, half of the audience sought to escape by the front doors and the other half attempted to get thru the rear exit. The latter was small and several children were flooded in the mad rush to that door. The women and children sought refuge from their pursuers on the adjoining street to the hall, a space about fifty feet square. Ignorant of the fire escape and unable to get farther away they huddled like sheep. A serious accident might have occurred had not the cooler-headed leaders of the veterans realized the predicament and corralled the soldiers to retreat. The soldiers cried out for "Jimmy" Simpson, the well-known leader of the opposition to conscription was in Ottawa.

lowed by several men who had their faces badly cut and discolored where they had been bruised by flat or stick. Later two or three others limped out with their clothes covered with dust, torn, and in disarray. One man had his mouth badly lacerated, another had his head and neck sides, covering his collar and clothes.

City Hall Meeting. At the city hall another meeting was held, addressed by Sergt.-Major Lowery, who told them present that the men were an organized orderly body, and not a mob, and that they were continuing to fight for the ideals that they had upheld in Flanders. He told the returned men that James Simpson did not represent the labor men and labor organizations in Ontario, as most of the members were in khaki serving in France. The speaker announced that a delegation of returned men would consult Simpson and learn upon what authority he spoke. Prolonged cheers greeted this statement.

Sam Beal, whose recruiting meeting was broken up by the parade in passing, addressed the crowd of about a thousand, as also did several others. At the conclusion of the meeting the sergeant-major told the evening was a fitting celebration of the battle of Zillebeke and the King's Birthday.

Sergt.-Major Lowery, when interviewed by a reporter for The World, late last night, denied the statement that the returned men had got beyond his control. "At all times the meeting was under control, and the men behaved in an orderly manner, and did nothing that reflected any discredit on their uniform," he said. "Before the controversy started, the women present were asked to stand to one side of the room, and the men did all in their power to prevent them from being hurt in any way."
