NEW PENSION REGULATIONS DECIDED UPON

Special Provision to be Made in Cases of Hardship as the Boards Recommend.

Ottawa, Dec. 23.—New pension regulations come into force on New Year's day. They will follow, in the main, recommendations made by the special committee of the house of commons, whose findings were published some months ago. But the recommendations have been supplemented in three important particulars:

1. The coming into force of the regulations is fixed for January 1, 1919.

2. All existing cases may be reviewed by the board of pension commissioners.

3. In special cases of hardship, the new regulations read, "which are not covered by the pension regulations and in cases in which special relief should be given, the commissioners shall have exclusive authority to make a recommendation to the governor-in-council, and the governor-in-council shall have authority upon such recommendation to award a pension or to afford relief."

In other words, where a case of exceptional hardship merits it, the board of pension commissioners may recommend that the cabinet make special provision. The committee of the house made its recommendations after hearing considerable evidence. They were announced in the last days of the session.
