"When I commenced taking your medicines, eighteen months ago, my health was completely broken down," writes Mrs. Cora L. Sunderland, of Chaneyville, Calvert Co., Md. "At times I tould not even walk across the room without pains in my chest. The doctor who attended me said I had lung trouble, and that I would sever be well again. At last I concluded to try Dr. Pierce's medicines. I bought a bottle of 'Golden Medical Discovery', took it, and soon commenced to feel a little better, then you directed me to take both, the 'Golden Medical Discovery', twelve of the 'Pavorite Prescription, which I did. Altogether I have taken eighteen bottless of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' twelve of the 'Pavorite Prescription, and five vials of 'Pellets.' I am now almost entirely well, and do all my work with more case than I could formerly scale."

The Quarrel

By KEITH GORDON

Copyright, 1905, by Frances Wile.

There were two sides to the question, of course. There always are two sides. He, being a man saw only the mascu-line side, while she, being every inch a woman, could see only the feminine aspect of the matter that rose between them like a wall.

them like a wall.

According to his reasoning, the great pearl that heamed softly on the third finger of her left hand—his gift—was the solemn, final expression of his faith, his choice. It was the official seal faith, his choice. It was the official seal affixed to his avowed belief that she was the supreme woman.

In his deeper, finer moments he would relive the moment when he had put it there, when the splendor of his own destiny had sobered and steadled him till his whole being had gone out in the wordless prayer, "God grant that I may make her hanny." make her happy."

From that moment she was the fixed star of his life. Indeed, she scarcely seemed to him a separate entity, but rather the finest part of nimseil. And this was where the trouble began. He was dashing and debonair, and the firmament of his life was strewn with stars of lesser magnitude, mere pinheads beside her, but in the aggregate rather the finest part of himself. And ty. That they were feminine stars goes ments when they shone and twinkled for his especial benefit how could he do less than to acknowledge the com-

To him it seemed ne more than a laughing byplay, the light, graceful variation of the grand love theme of his life. But the fixed star saw it differently—saw it with eyes that deepen-ed and darkened with tragedy which, after a few weeks of smoldering, burst nto the flame of anger.

Never, perhaps, had she appeared to him so superb, so obviously queen of the world, as at that moment when she had faced him, white with scorn, and accused him in plain, brutal, everyday

English of being a flirt.

At first sheer amazement held him silent. But from the torrent of words that rushed from her lips he was soon in possession of the sum of his offenses—his attentions to Miss Lincoln, his evident enjoyment of the society of Mrs. Colin Stuart, not to mention Betty Pell and Lucia Armitage!

As Van Pelt listened to the cutting words of his fiancee his first amazement gradually congealed into something else. He had paid some attentions to Miss Lincoln, who was a visitor and friend of his sister, and Mrs. Stuart had asked himself. had asked himsfor a dinner or so, and, as for Betty and Lucia, he never missed a chance to join them. Had they not been comrades since the days when their nurses wheeled their perambu-their nurses wheeled their perambu-laters to the park side by side?

And, though he had frequently en-countered Flavia under these circum-stances, no hint of his possible displeas-ure had ever occurred to him. She-was she not the only one, se near, se much a part of himself, that there was no mere need for explanation there was to his own soul? So at these encounters his eyes had leaped to meet hers without self consciousness and hers without self consciousness and without apology.

At first her confidence met his nobly. Then little gnawing doubts crept in. She would have liked him to protest, for, alas, she was but a woman! And sometimes the high, white place of his soul, where he kept her enthroned, made her shiver and long to be petted and scolded. And in place of that he made her a goddess, supprosedly with the power of reading heaves. hearts.

"You have—quite finished?"

His cool, drawling voice filled her first pause with an loy suavity, and the steel of his eyes met the fire of hers unflinchingly. Involuntarily she caught her breath. He not only showed no inclination to explain, to exculpate himself, but he had the look of a man who has received a mortal wound, whose deepest feelings have been mercilessly scoffed at, jeered at, trampled in the mire.

At the words her heart turned to ice. Truth to tell, her outbursts had nothing more serious than the quick resentment of a warm hearted, high spirited woman at a fancied neglect from the man she adored. A pair of open arms and eyes that loved back, begging for tolerance and forgiveness—that was what she wanted and expected. But this man with the hard glance and the incisive, cold voice glance and the incisive, cold voice-glance and the incisive, cold voice—what had she done?

Despite her terror, the world old battle between pride and love was raging in her heart, and it was pride that won.
"Finished?" she queried bitterly, with an inflection that conveyed that if she ceased it was by no means because she had reached the end of the flist. "We will call it so at least," And with the werds she drew off the ring and held it out to him. He received it and held it out to him. He received it with a lew bow.

Obviously the episode was ended. But at the door he turned back.

"When you have thought the matter ever more calmly you may possibly have something to say to me. I give you one week to reconsider."

His mastery of himself, his unyielding resistance to her, thrilled her through and through. Never had she loved him so absolutely, but there was no trace of her feeling in her macking reply.

"A week's grace!" So good of you!" she laughed rather wildly. "And yet, do you know, it is seven days more than I shall need, I shall never"—

But he had gone. A momen pater she heard the street door close with an om-inous bang. She stood stupidly in the middle of the room trying to realize that there was no future—nothing but a dreary waste that belied the name ahead of her. Then she looked at her left hand, now so bare, so naked, no longer a hand consecrate, but simply a woman's hand shorn of all its sweet significance, its badge of dear dependence gone.

A clock struck the hour in silver tones, fetching her back to the dull present. Oh, yes, Mrs. Colin Stuart's tea. She must go to that whatever happened; she must go to everything and be gay, gay! Otherwise people would say that she cared. He might even think that she did. The thought made her cheeks burn. And gay she was, so gay indeed that more than one of her friends turned long, inquiring looks up on her, looks full of puzzled questioning Once during the week of respite she met him, but at his cold, impassive met him, but at his cold, impassive greeting the little choking gladness that the sight of him had brought and which for a fleeting second shook her with its expectancy flickered out. He had bowed with cold courtesy—and passed on.

But one thought stood out clearly in the general confusion of her despair.

She must get away. Piteously she realized that she must not run the risk of constant meetings. The Branhams were sailing on Saturday. Why not go with

At the thought she started up, her the old fashion. That would be tit for tat. On her last day, of respite he should see her name on the list of outgoing passengers. Then perhaps he would regret that he had passed her with nothing but a perfunctory lifting of the hat. A lively ringing of telephone bells, a scurrying back and forth of passengers, and the thing was accomplished.

It was Friday night. Her trunks had gone to the pier, and in her dismantled room she battled with the lassitude that follows a whiri of feeling. She was dull, emotionless, axhausted. The quarrel, her flight, life itself, had ceased to matter, and she disconnected. dropped into a chair. It was then that her eyes fell upon the sampler.

The small mottled square of brown canvas, with its fading letters, had in some way escaped her attention until now and remained pinned against the wall. For an appreciable time she stared at its alphabet and agures, its stiff tree, its astenishingly alert birds, and at last at the inscription that always held a pensive interest for her "Amy Castle, aged eight years, 1808." "Amy Castle, aged eight years, 1808." More than once she had dreamed of that name. Who was amy Castle? The sampler had been found in a chest of inherited stuff, and no one could recall the owner. The small hands that had wrought those bedimmed figures were now dust, but what had come to them before the last resigned folding? Had Amy, too, loved and suffered and lost? Had her woman's pride smiled out on the world from a face drawn with pain? Transdry or comety, is out on the world from a face drawn with pain? Tragedy or comedy, it mattered little now. All that remained of her passing was this small, mottled sampler. This was what it all came to in the end—this—With a swift, eloquent gesture she arose and literally flew along the corridor to the telephone. "Quiek, Contral, quick!" she was urging a moment later. "It's—it's a matter of life and death!"

But all she could say when she could

But all she could say when she got ier number was a broken "Oh, Don-

A Good Foot Rule. Hearing that a large boot and sho stablishment was giving away a resent of a foot rule with every pair of boots or shees it sold, a man told his wife about the baygain and said that as her shoes were nearly done he would give her money to buy a new pair if she gave him the foot rule when she came back, as he wanted to sell it and so get back part of the money paid for the shoes. His wife went to he shop and after a great deal of rouble got a pair to please her. As she was leaving the shopman gave her a small box, which, he said, contained a foot rule. She went home delighted with her bargain and, seeing her hus-band at the door, gave him the box. When he opened ft he found, to his dis-gust, instead of the foot rule he want-ed, a slip of paper on which was writ-ten, "Avoid tight shoes."

Hanging In Chains.

One of the last instances in England of an order being made for hanging in chains is that of a chimney sweep who in 1827 murdered a man on the highin 1827 murdered a man on the highway. The culprit was tried by Mr. Justice Best at Lincoln assizes. The poor wretch's body never underwent, the proposed indignity. The inhabitants of Brigg took fright and thought that the gibbet standing so near the highway would terrify people and hinder them from coming to market. They petitioned against the judge's order being carried out, and the authorities remitted the horror. The last person hung is chains was a man named Cook, who suffered for the murder of a Mr. Paas. This occurred at Leicester in 1834, the very year that the custom was put an end to by statute.

The Ignerant Landsman.

The capitain of an ocean liner was entertaining a little group of passengers with sea stories. He said: "In Bremen one day I saw a farmer looking at the shipping in the harbor. A longshoreman was explaining the shipping to him. Finally I heard the longshoreman say, 'It is low water now, sir.' The farmer took his pipe out of his mouth and pointed it solemnly toward a heavily laden tramp steamer that was passing.

that was passing.

"It's a good thing for that vessel going past that it is low water,' he said. "The water's near over the edge of her now,'"

International Bible Lesson for To Sennacherib's Invasion-II. Chron.

Golden Text-"With us is the Lord our God to lelp us, and to fight our battles."

On the checkerboard of time two great powers, God and Satan, move mankind—as chess men are moved—they are contending against each other over the destinies of their menione power seeking to sanctify and bless, the other to demonize and As we submit ourselves to either of these two nowers we

As we submit ourselves to either of these two powers we are moulded as clay in the hands of a potter. Sennacherib and Hezeklah are the representatives of these powers and are moved by the spirit of one or other, Ged or Satan. Sennacheris—like the court of Russia or king alcohol—never dreams of defeat. To him his gods and his country's gods are as good and far better than the field of israel, and when his servants boast and blaspheme the Lord God of Israel, and when his servants boast and blaspheme the Lord God of Israel, they do not know He is Almighty and their every word insults Him to His face. Their human helplessness drives Israel's King and prophet to their knees; their eyes are lifted to God, whose honor is at take and from whom their help alone must come.

if in our pride our trust is in ourself or in an arm of flesh, failure and defeat are certain. Japan welcomes the gospel and gives liberty of conscience to all. Russia excludes the gospel and refuses liberty of conscience for all.

and refuses liberty of conscience for all.

The battle is on, said a Jap, between a Christianized paganish and a paganized Christianity, which strides eastward to blight and not to bless the nations.

Ontario welcomes the gospel and longs for liberty from strong drink. King Alcohol opposes the gospel and demoralizes his subjects, and just as in our lesson to-day, the side that is moved by God the Spirit, will be the winning side, but the answer - victory comes from God alone in answer to prayer. That night the Lord sent an angel—as at the destruction of the first-born in Egypt—and slew 185.000 of Syria's soldiers. Then King Sennacherib defeated, yet deluded, went home to worship his false gods and to be assassinated by his own sons. While the Lord God Almighty was honored by the free will offerings of His people and King Hezekiah was exalted before the surrounding nations, all in answer to the prayer of two men. Are we the prayer of two men. Are praying as they did?
