"A government here remains in power and commands the resources of patronage. It can buy railways and other great corporations with subsides, and these in turn can buy—sad to say!—the people" Only those who are blinded by tory prejudice can deny that these words are pregnant with truth.—At the general elections, instances in which constituences were actually bought up by the exercise of patronage were shamefully numerous, while the influence which subsidied railway corporations exercised over men whom they control, was sufficient to show that the government had systematically set to work to maintain themselves in power of the first reports had been distinct to the doubt the connections of the first reports were then called in, at least as many of them as it was possible to reach, and another report with the correct statement printed and issued. We have not yet learned who bears the expense of the second issue. It is unfortunate that this blunder the influence which subsidied railway or portations. There are now many hundred thousand feet of lumber to the same substitution. At the general elections, instances in which constituences were actually bought up to the exercise of patronage. The influence for evil which such acts have upon a people, it is impossible to estimate. Coming generations of Canadians will feel the effects of the course which our rulers are now persuing, and will wonder that in an enlightened age men could be found so heartly to endorse it as do those who, by virtue of purchased seats, now vote approval of it. Never in the history of Canadian politics has such shameful corruption been seen as that which is now purposed in the such as a rule, be harged with making too favorable state by which our purpose would be found so heartly to endorse it as do those who, by virtue of purchased seats, now vote approval of it.
