THE USURPER

"No!" responded Sylvia. "But you must not call me by that grand name. My name is Sylvia.—Sylvia Bond. You must call me Sylvia."
"Yesi" said Audrey, "And you—"
She laughed and took both Sylvia's hands. "We are like two school giris swearing an eternal friendship, are we not! You will call me Audrey!"
Sylvia laughed and nodded.
"How strange it is! We have only known each other five minutes, and yet we seem to be old friends!"
"Yes," said Audrey. "We must see as much as we can of each other! How proud I shall be when I am looking at you on the stage and all the people are applauding, to think that you are my friend."

As they sat side by side, Sylvia related some of the incidents of her professional carear and became confidential regarding her future intentions. Audrey tore herself away at last, and Sylvia went down to the door with her, and saw her walk away. Audrey turned into the park, and, sinking into a seat, clasped her hands tightly. She was alone now, and could attempt to realize what had and could attempt to realize what had pefallen her.
"What have I done? What have I

"What have I done? What have I done?" broke from her white lips. "So faithful, so true, while I—— Oh, what will he think, what will he say?"

Sh looked around wildly, as one looks around for some reasons of escape from some great peril, and finds none.

She knew Jordan too well to hope that he would release her, and, indeed, how could she, without cruel injustice to him, ask him to let her go.

"Too late, too late!" she murmured, echoing Jordan's words, but with how different a meaning!

CHAPTER XXI

Sir Jordan Lynne was a happy man. He had won one of the most charming beauties of England. He was en route to Lynne, and all the way he was planning out the future. He would refurnish the old house, redecorate it throughout; one of the best firms should have carte blanche in respect to the furniture. furniture.

the furniture.
Audrey was fond of horses; the stables should be rebuilt, and—that wing which had been shut up for so long, in which was the room in which his father had died, should be pulled down.

He put this last, but in truth, it was the first thing he thought of and resolved upon doing. Yes, that room should disappear, be wiped out, forgotten.

On his arrival at Lynne, his novel cheerfulness surprised Frome, the solemn butler. After he had eaten dinner, he busied himself writing letters, and thus two or three hours were passed alone in his library.

Then there came to him a strange desire to visit the shadow hourted shore.

sire to visit the shadow-haunted ber in which his father died.

ber in which his father died.
"It will be as well, perhaps, to—to look round before the wing is pulled down," he muttered, trying to persuade himself that he was acting of his own free will. When his valet had left him in his own room, and with the rest of the servants had gone to bed, Jordan took an unlighted candle and matches, and stealthily made his way to the closed chambers.

and stealthily made his way to the clos-ed chambers.

As he turned the carefully oiled key in the thick door he cursed his weakness which prevented him from resisting the impulse, but he knew that the strange lenging which was urging him would not be denied, and he did not even strugment, then he raised his eyes and scaning the hink door he cursed his weakness which prevented him from resisting the impulse, but he knew that the strange lenging which was urging him would not be denied, and he did not even struggle.

He closed the door noiselessly behind him, lighting the candle, raised it and looked around.

Everything was as he had seen it and left it on his last visit, and with a shudder, as his eyes fell upon the huge function on the last occasion, but he seemed to take more pains, and display more patience, for, not content with dragging out the bureau, he, as if suddenly struck by an idea, tore up the edge of the thick carpet, and examined the boards beneath.

He was covered with dust, his hands were grimed, but so engrossed was he that he did not notice it; so absorbed.

He was covered with dust, his hands were grimed, but so engrossed was he that he did not notice it; so absorbed, indeed, that he did not know that the candle had burned down to the socket until he heard it sputter.

He got up from his knees and hurried across the room, and stood for a week.

across the room, and stood for a mo-ment asking himself whether he should relinquish the search, or go and get anther candle. The candle flickered down, and as its light waned he saw that the moonlight was shining through a chink of the shutter.

He extinguished the candle, and, feeling his way to the window, carefully and cautiously unbarred the shutter and opened it just wide enough to allow the mocr.light to stream in and fall upon the floor which he had been examuing. It was impossible that he could be overlooked, and this plan was safer and easier than going to and from his bedroom for another candle.

He ewnt back to the carpet and knelt down and felt along the surface of the boards with his thick white-now dirty hands. Suddenly he heard a slight noise behind him and his heart leaped heavily; but he remembered the night he had suffered on his last visit by the but against the window and he would not look around, but remained with his head bent over his task.

Then with a suppressed cry he sprang to his feet, and stood recoiling, white with terror, for a hand was sliding slowly and cunningly around the edge of the shutter.

The awful silence as broken at last.

"Given you a start, eh, Sir Jordan?" said a dry, harsh voice behind the light.
"Didn't expect to see me, I imagine."

Jordan started, and put his trembling hand to his lips.

"Banke. You!" he exclaimed huskily. The man chuckled at the baronet's confusion, and set the lantern on the table. As he did so the light fell upon his face.

It was the face of Lavarick, with its thin lips twisted into a sneer of insolent contempt as he looked sideways at the shrinking Jordan.

He wore a broad-brimmed hat which nearly hid his unprepossesing countenance, and was dressed in the style of a mechanic. He sat on the small table and folded his arms as if he desired to enjoy the sight of Sir Jordan's discomfiture at leisure.

Jordan had recovered himself a little by this time and assumed an indignant and handret air.

Jordan had recovered himself a little by this time and assumed an indignant and haughty air.

"What do you mean by forcing your way into the house?" he said, still rather nuskily.

Lavarick smiled insolently.

"Thought Fd give you a pleasant little surprise, Sir Jordan." he said. "Besides, it's too late to disturb the servants. Don't know that I should have dropped in this evening, but I happened to be passing and saw the light up in the room here, and I felt rather curious to see what was going on in the room that Sir Jordan keeps shut up so closely. It was rather awkward getting up, but I learned to climb when I was a boy, and the ivy is pretty thick, and here I am. And what were you doing. Sir Jordan. Cleaning the furniture, eh?"

Jordan had been thinking rapidly while the man had been thinking rapidly while the man had been thinking and he moved toward the bell as he replied:

"I give you two minutes to go back by the way you came. If you remain at the end of that time I will coll the servants and hand you over to the police."

Lavarick laughed.

"Bravo, Sir Jordan! Not a bit of bluff that. But don't you waste your time waiting the two minutes; ring up the slaveys at once, they'll be interested in the little chat you and I are going to have."

Jordan's hand dropped from the bell, which indicated weakness on his part. It is always unwise to threaten unless you can perform.

"Say what you have to say quickly and go," he said, biting his lip. "Of course you have come to extort money."

"Right, the first time," retorted Lavarick. "And of course you don't mean to give it; quite right, don't you be bullied." and he laughed with impudent mockery.

Jordan's face was an ugly sight at that moment; he actually moved a step or two toward Lavarick, but Lavarick did not appear marmed; he took a revolver from his pocket, and in a careless way tapped the edge of the table

"No good trying that on with me, Sir Jordan," he said, quietly. "You're a younger and a stronger man than I am, and so I brought this little plaything to make us a little more equal; not that I shall want to use it, because you are a sensible man, I know, Sir Jordan, and will listen to argument."

Jordan stood looking down for a moment, then he raised his eyes and scanned the man's face watchfully.

"You think you possess some know-

"I remember." he said. "You attempted to break into the house to commit a burglary. I have no doubt."
"Nothing of the kind." interrupted "Nothing of the kind," interrupted Lavarick, coolly, "I was running away from the police: they pressed me rather hard, and it occurred to me that if I could get into the house and hide, the simple-headed idiots would never think of looking for me here, and I could get away when the night was darker. I knew that I could get into this room by the steps and ran up them, intending to come in by the window here."

Jordan's, blood ran cold in his veins. He would have rushed from the room, but terror rendered him incapable of motion; he could only stand and watch the hand as it slip along the shutter like the hand of a ghost, and wait. Neville would have sprung at it and seized its owner, but the great statesman was very different from his "vagabond" brother, and his nerves already tried severely by the ghostly stillness of the room and its associations, ere completely wrecked by this fearful apparition.

The hand pushed back the shutter, and a man sprang into the room, drew the shutter close and at the same moment turned the light of a bull'seye lantern full upon Jordan's white, distorted face.

Jordan could see nothing behind the fierce stream of light, and stood panting and trembling, longing to spring and you were standing beside him, and trembling, longing to spring and you were standing beside him sant for you to hear. You looked ngly. Sir Jordan." and he smiled.

found I could hear every word. What was it I heard, Sir Jordan?"
Jordan's lips twitched.
"You could have heard very little," he said. "My father's voice was weak..."
"So it was," assented Lavarick, "but my ears are sharp. Law, bless you, a man's hearing gets cute when he's spent months listening to the step of the warder outside his cell. I can hear a mouse scampering across the floor; I can hear the tick of a watch in a man's pocket under a couple of thick coats. I can almost hear your heart beating now, Sir Jordan," an dhe grinned. "I heard every word the old man said, and this is pretty nearly the sense of it. He was telling you about his will...."

FRENCH TREATY.

Other Countries Will Benefit By Ottawa, Sept. 30.—The new Franco Canadian tariff treaty, just drafted in Paris, will affect also Canada's tariff duties on imports from Japan and from other nations included in the most favored-nation clause of Canadian trade treaties. Under that clause all British countries, Argentina, Austria-Hungary, Bolivia, Colombia, Corea, Denmark, France, Algeria and French colonies, Japan, Siberia, Morocco, Persia, Russia, Sweden, Salvador and Venezuela are entitled, in return for trade and tariff privileges granted Canada to the tariff rates granted the most-favored-nation. The provisions of the new agreement with France are of course not yet published, but it may be taken for granted that the principal concessions given to France will be on wines. champagne and lished, but it may be taken for granted that the principal concessions given to France will be on wines, champagne and silks exported to Canada. These form now by far the largest items in Canada's import trade with France. In 1906 Canada imported French silks and silk fabrics valued at $878.202, and wines valued at $1,019.830. From Japan last year Canada imported silks to the value of $471.565, this being the chief item of Japan's exports to this country. Under the treaty with Japan any tariff concession granted France on silks must also be granted to Japan. Consequently it will be seen that Japanese silk exporters will likely profit by the new treaty

It Was in 1896.

Ottawa, Oct. 1.—The close of the present fiscal year will see Canada with a revenue of a hundred million dollars, or three times what it was when the Laurier Government assumed power in 1896. During the first six months of the present fiscal year the revenue has reached the record total of $50,341,208. This is thirteen million dollars more than was collected during the whole of the first year of the Laurier regime when Mr. Fielding made his first budget speech, and the great increase in revenue has Fielding made his first budget speech, and the great increase in revenue has been achieved under a lower rate of taxation at customs ports. Public works which will promote the development of Canada are being benefited by the great revenue, and at the same time the debt of the Dominion is being reduced. The revenue for the past six months shows an increase of about ten millions as compared with the corresponding period of last year, an increase of 20 per cent. The customs revenue totalled $31,412,735, an increase of a little over six millions.

STRIKE IS SPREADING.

Springhill Mines Mechanics Going Out in Sympathy.

Halifax, Sept. 30.—Three hundred mechanics are going out on strike at Springhill on Wednesday, in sympathy with the miners. The Cumberland Coal & Railway Company has notified the Provincial Government that it will not be able to keep the pumps going, and that the Government must be prepared to operate the collieries. This notification was given in a letter to the Government from the company on Saturday, and the Government will determine immediately what action will be taken. In the event of the company not being able to operate the pumps, the Government would step in and operate them, and they can order the striking pumpmen back to their places.
