Desperate Remedies

By Thomas Hardy.
AUTHOR OF "A PAIR OF BLUE EYES," "THE TRUMPET-MAJOR," ETC.

There was nothing to come but misery now. They would step ashore; he would say good-night, go to London to-morrow, and the miserable she would lose him for ever.
She did not quite suppose, what was the fact, that a parallel thought was simultaneously passing through his mind.

They were now within ten yards, now within five; he was now only waiting for a "smooth" to bring the boat in. Sweet love must not be slain thus, was the fair maid's reasoning. She was equal to the occasion—adversities are—and delivered the god.

"Do you want very much to land, Mr.
Springrove?" she said, letting her young rictus eyes pine at him a very little.
"If I am not at all," said the young man with a look of his eye half-bellied. "But do you?"

"I think that now we have come out, and it is such a pleasant evening," she said softly and sweetly, "I should like a little longer row if you don't mind. I'll try to steer a little better than before if it makes it easier for you. I'll try very hard."

It was the turn of his face to tell a tale now. He looked, "We understand each other—ah, we do, darling," turned the boat, and pulled back into the bay once more.

"Now steer me wherever you will," he said in a low voice. "Never mind the directness of the course—wherever you will."
"Shall it be Laying shore?" she said, pointing in that direction.

"Laying shore," he said grasping the sculls. She took the strings daintily, and they wound away to the left.
For a long time nothing was audible in the boat but the regular dip of the oars, their movements in the rowlocks.
Springrove at last spoke.

"I must go away to-morrow," he said, tentatively.
"Yes," she replied faintly.
"To-morrow?" he advanced a little in his profession in London.

"Yes," she said again, with the same preoccupied softness.
"What's that?"
"Why not? Architecture is a bewitching profession. They say an architect's work is another man's play."

"Yes, but worldly advantage from an architect doesn't depend upon mastering it. I don't think it did, but it doesn't. Those who get rich need have no skill at all as artists."

"What need they have?"
"A certain kind of energy which men with any fondness for art possess very seldom indeed—and earnestness in making acquaintance, and a love for using them.
They give their whole time to the work of dining out, after mastering it, a few mentary facts to serve up in the conversation. Now, after saying that, do I seem a man likely to make a mistake?"

"What's that?"
"To give too much room to the latent feelings which is rather common, in these days among the unappreciated, that because some markedly successful men are fools, all markedly unsuccessful men are geniuses."
"Pretty subtle for a young man," he said slowly. "From that remark, I should fancy you had bought experience." "I do try to succeed," she said, with a slight thoughtfulness, leaving her eyes on him.
Springrove flushed a little at the earnestness of her words, and mused. "Then, like Cato the Censor, I shall do what I despise to be in the fashion," he said at last.
"Well, when I found all this out that I was speaking of, whatever do you think I did?
From having already loved very passionately, I went on to read it continually; then I went rhyming myself. If any thing on earth ruins a man for useful occupation, and for content with reasonable success in a profession or trade, it is the habit of writing verses on emotional subjects, which had much better be left to die from want of nourishment."

Limits of Natural Vision.
The limits of vision vary with elevation, conditions of the atmosphere, intensity of illumination and other modifying elements in different cases. On a clear day an object one foot above a level plain may be seen at a distance of 1.31 miles; one foot high, 4.15 miles; one 20 feet high, 4.86 miles; 100 feet high, 13.1 miles; one mile high, as the top of a mountain, 93.23 miles. This shows seven inches—or to be exact, 6.99 inches—of the curvature of the earth in three days the distance of the horizon from the eye is sufficient to produce an image.
Five miles may be taken as the extreme limit at which a man is visible on a flat plain to an observer on the same level.

How to Cure a Corn.
It is one of the worst of the world to cure a corn. Do not use acids or other caustic agents, but don't cut a hole in your foot.
It is simply to apply Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, and in three days the corn can be removed without pain. No acids, no painless. Take only Putnam's Corn Extractor.

The Head Surgeon
Of the Lubon Medical Company is now at Toronto, Canada, and may be consulted either in person or by letter on all chronic diseases peculiar to man, woman, young, old, or middle-aged, who find themselves nervous, weak and exhausted, who are broken down from excess or overwork, resulting in many of the following symptoms: Mental depression, premature old age, loss of vitality, loss of memory, bad dreams, dimness of sight, palpitation of the heart, emissions, lack of energy, pain in the kidneys, headache, pimples on the face or body, itching or peculiar sensation about the scrotum, wasting of the organs, dizziness, spots before the eyes, twitching of the muscles, eyelids and elsewhere, backache, distension of the urine, loss of will power, tenderness of the scalp and spine, weak and failing muscles, desire to sleep, failure to be rested by sleep, constipation, dullness of hearing, loss of voice, desire for solitude, excitability of temper, stinking eyes surrounded with redness, circles, oily looking dehility that lead to insanity and death unless cured. The spring of vital force having lost its tension every function of the body is deranged. Those who through abuse committed in ignorance may be permanently cured. Send your address for look on all diseases peculiar to man.
