

commended to that active and excellent institution.

The young women from rural congregations in the city, engaged in various industrial employments, are nearly as numerous. And still they will come. We have heard of many instances of their being driven to very unsuitable places—to use no stronger term—by taking the advice of cabmen at the stand. Let those who may come to the city after the middle of March drive to the "Home for Young Women of good character," at the North end of Lockman Street, and all such perilous places will be avoided.
