The prospectus offered most alluring prospects to the investing public. Some of these prospects, such, for instance, as the allusions to the future prosperity of the Provinces through which the road would run, have been amply realized, more so than the promoters could have expected. The wealth of the colony, since that time, has advanced by leaps and bounds. The movement of trade, as indicated by the imports and exports, was mentioned in a despatch written by Lord Elgin, then Governor-General, as amounting, in 1851, to £7,000,000 stg. Last year it was £86,000,000 stg. The revenue which Lord Elgin mentions as being, in 1851, less than £700,000, increased in 1902 to over £12,000,-000 stg. In one particular the predictions of the framers of the prospectus have not by any manner of means been realized-in the estimate which they formed of the dividend to be earned on the share capital of the Company, which they put at 11½%. You may laugh, but the resources and the prospects of that maynificent lead are such that it is not at all magnificent land are such that it is not at all impossible that even that fair dream may one day be realized, though I must frankly own that I am hardly sanguine enough to anticipate that I shall be able to stand up in my place in this hall and make the gratifying announcement to the shareholders, but I do not hesitate to say that had this corporation had fair play, as might reasonably have been associated. play, as might reasonably have been expected, considering the auspices under which it was started, without attaining, perhaps, to the magnificent dividend of 11½% the financial fortunes of the Country and the magnificent dividend of 11½% the financial fortunes of the Company would have fared better than they have done in the past, for the prospectus—this Government prospectus, as I may call it—sets out that the scheme which offers the most comprehensive system of railway in the world, is protected from the possibility of injurious competition for nearly its entire length by natural causes as well as by legislative enactment —a declaration which did not proposed. which did not prevent powers being after wards given to another company to establish an entirely unnecessary line close alongside
