

volume is Dr. Goodwin's Syntax of the Moods and Tenses of the Greek Verbs, in a re-written and enlarged edition. No book is better known to the Greek scholar than Dr. Goodwin's, and his reputation as a Graecist of the highest authority is crowned by this new edition of his work. The last of the five volumes is an edition of Æschines on the Crown, prepared by Professor Rufus B. Richardson, of Dartmouth College. This is a companion volume of the series mentioned above, and supervised by the same editors, Professor White and Seymour. The plan of the series is continued, including introduction, critical notes under the text, and an index. The biography of Æschines and the history of his effort in this oration are sure to be appreciated by the student.

ATLAS OF COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY, by J. G. Bartholomew, F.R.C.S., F.R.S.E., and published by Messrs. C. J. Clay & Sons, of the Cambridge University Press, Ave Maria Lane, London, England. The maps of this atlas are intended to illustrate the general facts of physical, political, economic and statistical geography on which international commerce depends. Accompanying the maps, and partly explanatory of them, are several pages of introductory notes by Dr. H. R. Mill, of Heriot-Watt College, Edinburgh, which are concise and to the point. Of the maps themselves we cannot speak too highly. Coming from such a firm as the Messrs. John Bartholomew & Co., they could hardly fail to be the best of their kind. There are twenty-seven maps in all, sixteen of them illustrative of the principles of physical geography, all giving evidence of the skill and taste of the designer.
