WHAT IS SAID OF IT.

"The Magazine of American History has no rival in the field it occupies so successfully."—Troy Times.

"It is a credit to the publishers, and, in real value, this magazine is far ahead of most of the monthlies."—The Worcester Spy.

"It is admirably edited, presenting the living facts of history instead of the dry bones gathered by antiquarians."—Portland Advertiser.

"No periodical sent to our table is read with greater interest and enjoyment, and none is more highly prized."—Christian Intelligencer.

"This is one of the best periodicals which comes to our table."—Syracuse Times.

"Few magazines would be missed so much as this elegantly contrived, excellently written one, dealing with topics that connect the new with the old."—Hartford Post.

EXTRACTS FROM SOME NEWSPAPER NOTICES.

The fact of the name of the author of these poems appearing also as publisher, is likely to make the reader a little suspicious of the quality, especially as the volume is very nicely printed. But, although perhaps rendered hypercritical on this account, we have found the contents to be decked out in a by no means unbecoming dress. The poems are mostly narrative, but Mr. Abbey's lips have been touched with the sacred fire.—The Week, Toronto.

Mr. Abbey's book arrests attention chiefly through its quality of freshness. There is something of the unusual and the picturesque in the poems. . . . Real relief and enjoyment is to be found in this collection of noble deeds set to musical verse.—Literary World, London.

It does not take a deep search in the contents of Mr. Abbey's volume to show that the author is an original thinker, that he has a distinct command of language, and that he successfully employs it as a vehicle for his thoughts. . . . The verse is pliant, and the imagery bold and undaunted.—Sunday Times, Memphis.

On almost every page of Mr. Abbey's book there are lines which are singularly happy in expression, and the leading thought of many of the pieces is strikingly original; above all, there is an appreciation of the beautiful in Nature, and a sympathy with the pathetic in human life, which ought to give the writer a high place among the minor poets. . . . The swing and music of many of the poems show that he has a quite exceptional power of melodious composition.—The Spectator, London.

Mr. Abbey is not a sentimentalist; he is a poet of the Browning and Matthew Arnold order—intellectual, thoughtful, and very earnest. His verses are not merely the die-a-ways of lovers, but studies of many phases of history and human emotion. The variety of this true poetical observer is very striking.—The American, Philadelphia.

FOR TEACHERS

A NEW

Educational Journal.

THE SCIENCE COMPANY of New York announce that they will publish, at an early date, the first number of SCIENCE AND EDUCATION.

The aim of this paper is twofold. 1st. To give the teacher a paper that will interest him as an individual; and, 2nd, to give him the most reliable and valuable information obtainable regarding his profession.

The material for the first part will be such as has been originally secured for the weekly paper SCIENCE; that for the second part will be carefully selected, with special attention to the needs of educators.

SCIENCE AND EDUCATION will contain 13 numbers in each annual volume (appearing every fourth Friday during the year). To immediate subscribers for 1887, however, we will give free the two numbers appearing in November and December of this year. The subscription price will be $1.50 a year. Sample copies of the first (November) number will be sent free upon application. Address
