

14. Harp, John and Hofley, John (eds.) Poverty in Canada. Toronto, Prentice-Hall of Canada, 1971.

An examination of "poverty amid affluence" in Canada by a number of academic and public service sociologists and economists. It contains a very useful introduction to the topic and a very useful bibliography on the subject.

15. Hughes, E.C. French Canada in Transition. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1943 (reprinted in paperback edition, Phoenix Edition, 1963)

This work is generally recognized as a classic in the field of Canadian sociological research. Although the data are now somewhat dated the general analysis of French Canada as it moves from an agricultural to an industrial society is timeless. It is an extremely useful "starting point" for any study of Canadian society with particular reference to Anglophone-Francophone relations, or for a study of ethnic relations in any developing area.

16. Ishwaran, K. (ed.) The Canadian Family: A Book of Readings. Toronto, Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1971, 557 pp.

The editor of this book of readings on the Canadian family has drawn together a selection of articles that provide considerable empirical data which can be used to good advantage after reading the more general formulations put forward by Elkin in his work The Family in Canada. In his introduction the author notes the influence of sociological writing from the United States on studies of the Canadian family but also notes that while "the popular view that the Canadian family is just like the American family" may be held by many the studies contained in this volume indicate that a wide variety of families exist in Canada - the Eskimo family, the Hutterite family, the Japanese-Canadian family, etc. An interesting volume which indicates the wide range of family research going on in Canada.

17. Johnstone, John W.C., Young People's Images of Canadian Society. Ottawa, Information Canada, 1969.

One of the studies prepared for the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. It reports on a survey of Francophone and Anglophone youth and their perceptions of Canadian society. The similarities and differences of the 'images' of these two groups are analyzed.

18. Joy, Richard. Languages in Conflict: The Canadian Experience. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart (Carleton Library), 1972, 149 pp.

A very imaginative and well handled study in historical demography and a very valuable work for sociologists interested in the sociology of Canada, particularly in French-English relations and the assimilation process. An excellent statement and analysis of the "Bilingual Belt", a bilingual zone which is purported to divide an increasingly French unilingual
