JUST THE MEDICINE

LENTEN FARE

HERE is a proverb that says: "Only the Arabs of the desert despise fish," and this is true, for wherever fish may be had they are prized

Not only Friday, but every day is now "fish day," for many families exclude flesh from their diet during Lent. It is fortunate that the choicest specimens of sea and lake food are just coming into the market. . Trout and shad are gaining in size and flavor every day and the most beautiful of all fish that come to our tables-mackerel-promises to yield a big spring catch.

It is not difficult to choose fish as it is some other foods; the fresh ones have no strong odor, the eyes are clear and full and the scales brilliant. The gills should look red, the flesh feel firm to the touch and the fins stiff. Any sizable fish may be broiled to good advantage and any fish that s suitable to be broiled may also be planked.

From a gustatory point of view, a planked fish is the finest of all, for very bit of flavor is retained and every bite is a tasty morsel. The fish must be buttered on both sides, after it is split open, then fastened to the thick oak board with the skin side up. Let the first heat be gradual, and little by little move the fish nearer the flame. Every few moments haste the fish with melted butter and hot water mixed in equal every tablespoon of butter and one tablespoon of lemon juice.

Broiled fish is drier than planked fish and needs a sauce. A favorite one for fish and other dishes is:

Cream Butter Sauce—Two tablespoons of butter beaten to a cream, one tablespoon of flour beaten in with one teaspoon of salt and a small pinch of mace. Have ready a cup of milk in a porcelain lined pan. When hot pour on the beaten butter and flour. Return all to the pan and add half a cup of boiling water. Cook, stirring until well thickened.

Fish is excellent food, for it gives a large proportion of muscle-building material, as compared with meat and game, and it gives a pleasing variety to the diet.
